This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. PREFACE.

In this work the orthography and pronunciation of the modern English, according to the prevailing usage of correct writers and speakers, is faithfully exhibited; whilst the definitions of the words have been carefully attended to, and are sufficiently clear, full, and accurate to meet the wants of the student and critical inquirer, without being so diffuse or complicated as to unfit them for the use of the middle and upper 'forms' of schools, and for the general and humbler class of readers.

To this it may be added, that in most cases the definitions are given, or supplemented, on a plan which will be found to render this work not merely an 'expository,' but also a 'synonymous' Dictionary of the English Language.

Words, in respect to the pronunciation or orthography of which usage or orthoëpists differ, have such diverse pronunciation or spelling appended to each in its alphabetical place in the vocabulary; by which the possessor of this Dictionary, by almost a mere glance of the eye, is brought acquainted with the opinions and practice of our leading contemporary and previous writers, without the expense of possessing, or the loss of time in referring to, their respective works.

A large number of the classical and foreign words which are now so freely introduced into the pages of our current and periodical literature, with a copious collection of the Terms of Modern Art and Science, are inserted in this work; whilst the Participles, and other Formatives, not usually found in Dictionaries, of which the orthography so often puzzles the beginner, and even the experienced writer, are given, in all cases, after their respective verbs, adjectives, &c.

The scheme of elementary sounds adopted in this Dictionary, and the 'notation' by which these sounds are expressed, will, it is trusted, be found not merely more accurate, but simpler than those of either Mr Walker or Mr Sheridan, or their followers.

The system of indicating the sounds of the vowels, by figures placed over them, has been superseded by the introduction of simple 'phonotypes,' which, by appealing to the eye, or falling in with previous impressions, become self-explanatory after a single reference to the 'Key to the Pronunciation' given at the commencement of the work.

Digitized by Google

The unpronounceable combinations of letters noticed in the 'Introduction, and used by Knowles and others, as worshi*pd*, unbisho*pd*, &c., have been uniformly avoided as useless and deceptive.

By the use of abbreviations (for the most part self-explanatory) to express the more familiar and frequently recurring words, many excellences hitherto characteristic of much more voluminous works, have been compressed into the space of a hand-dictionary, without in any degree sacrificing clearness to compression.

Mr Sheridan's Pronouncing Dictionary contains about 37,000 words; Mr Walker's, 33,178; this Dictionary, more than double the number of either of them.

It now merely remains to observe, that, after the body of the Dictionary was prepared, it was deemed necessary to omit several of the less important 'Sections' of the Introduction, for the purpose of keeping the volume within certain limits. The sectional numbers, for which the reader will accordingly find no corresponding explanatory matter, are 47, 49–57, 59, 61–87, and 94–98.

INTRODUCTION.

1. The ENGLISH LANGUAGE—Its Alphabet and Elementary sounds—Vowels, Consonants, Diphthongs, Triphthongs, their nature, classification, organic formation, &c.

1. The LETTERS of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE arranged in their customary order, called the 'English Alphabet,' are twenty-six[1] in number, as follows: A, a; B, b; C, c; D, d; E, e; F, f; G, g; H, h; I, i; J, j; K, k; L, l; M, m; N, n; O, o; P, p; Q, q; R, r; S, s; T, t; U, u; V, v; W, w; X, x; Y, y; Z, z.

This Alphabet, besides possessing other faults, for some of which perhaps 'a sufficient, although not a satisfactory reason' can be given, is—1. Redundant, in containing four superfluous letters[2]:—2. Deficient, in wanting signs for, at least, six of the sounds heard in the 'spoken language'[3]: and—3. Inconsistent, in expressing the sounds of three double consonants[4], and two diphthongs[5], each by a single sign; and three, or more, of the single consonant-sounds heard in speech[6], each by two signs or letters. Deducting the four 'superfluous letters' only 22 alphabetic characters remain to express the elementary sounds of the 'spoken language', which are much more numerous[7].

2. The SIMPLE or ELEMENTARY SOUNDS of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE do not 'exceed' thirty-five in number, of which, however, two[8], at least, are doubtful; whilst six[9] of the remainder appear to be mere varieties of other sounds, and owe their claims to be regarded as distinct elements chiefly to the shortening and modifying influence of a following consonant. Hence, the number of sounds in English, absolutely elementary, may be regarded as only twenty-seven[10]; or if the 'trilled' or 'initial' r, and the 'palatal', 'guttural', or 'final' r, be regarded as mere modifications of the same articulation—an opinion held by many writers on grammar, but with which we do not agree[11]—the number will be further reduced to twenty-six.

[1] Before the introduction of separate characters for i and j, and for u and v, which had always separate powers though expressed by the same symbols, the letters of the English alphabet were only twenty-four in number.

[2] Viz., c, j, q, and x; to these, w and y are added by those writers who regard them as being vowels in all positions.

[3] Viz., the u in 'but', the th in '*th*in', the th in '*th*ine', the sh in '*sh*ine', the s (zh) in 'a*s*ure', and the ng in 'ki*ng*'.

[4] Viz., j, q, and x.

[5] Viz., i (ī) and u (ū).

[6] Viz., the th in '*th*in', the th in '*th*ine', and the sh in '*sh*ine'.

[7] A perfect alphabet would necessarily contain a separate character or letter for every elementary sound of the 'spoken language', and the name of each letter would be, as nearly as possible, the sound of which it is the visible sign; a degree of convenience and accuracy existing, however, in the alphabet of no known language.

[8] Viz., w and y; which, though usually and conveniently regarded as 'consonants' when initial, are true 'vowels' in all positions, as noticed hereafter.

[9] Viz., ă, ĕ, ĭ, ŏ, ŭ, o͝o (o͝o); which appear to be mere varieties or modifications of the 'long' or 'open' vowels that stand opposite to them in the Table of Elem. Sounds (below).

[10] In practice, owing to the modifying influence of the consonants on the vowels and on each other, and of accent and syllabication, these sounds are virtually extended to 35, or certainly, at the least, to 34.

[11] For the reasons, see Note 21 (below).

A List of these ELEMENTARY SOUNDS, arranged in the order of their organic formation, or in accordance with the 'Alphabet of Nature', is given in the following TABLE :—

VOWELS.

	Long or Open.[12]			Phonotypes.[14]
1.	The sound of a	in	ah, far, father	= ā
2.	" a	"	ale, fate	= ā
3.	" e	"	beat, eel, mete	= ē
4.	" a or o	"	all, bawl, talk, or, nor[15]	= ā, āw, or o(r)
5.	" o	"	no, ope, mote	= ō
6.	" oo	"	cool, food	= o͞o
	Short, Stopped, or Derivative.[13]			Phonotypes.[14]
7.	The sound of a	in	hat, fat, ham	= ă
8.	" e	"	bed, ell, pet	= ĕ
9.	" i	"	ill, pit, tin	= ĭ
10.	" o or a	"	on, not, what	= ŏ, ă, or ăw
11.	" u	"	but, cup, hurry[16]	= ŭ
12.	" u or oo	"	bull, pull, foot	= o͝o

CONSONANTS.

Doubtful.	13. The sound of w	in	woe, will[17]	= w
	14. " y	"	ye, yes, yet[18]	= y
	15. " h	"	hat, home[19]	= h
	16. " k	"	kill, oak	= k
	17. " g	"	gain, go, egg	= g
	18. " t	"	top, fate	= t
	19. " d	"	dip, fade	= d
	20. " p	"	pin, rope	= p
	21. " b	"	bit, boast, robe	= b

	23. " s or z	"	vision, azure	= zh
	24. " s	"	seal, hiss	= s
	25. " z	"	zeal, buzz, blaze	= z
	26. " th	"	thin, thigh, breath	= th
	27. " th	"	thy, thine, breathe	= th

[12], [13] See Section 3.

[14] The characters and digraphs in this column are those used to represent the respective sounds in the 'notation' employed in this Dictionary.

[15] This sound of o is represented in the 'notation' of this Dictionary by the simple 'o' before r (i. e., or), except in cases where some other word, though similarly spelled, is differently pronounced, and then by 'aw', as given in the column of phonotypes (above). See Sections 17, 26.

[16] The u in cur, fur, &c., is radically the same sound, though lengthened and relatively 'unstopped' by the modifying influence of the r.

[17] That initial w is a 'vowel', equivalent to o͞o or o͝o, as taught by Lowth, Sheridan, Knowles, and Webster; and not a 'consonant', as Walker says it 'is generally acknowledged' to be; will, we think, be admitted by every one who, unbiassed by school-teaching and popular opinion, will rigidly investigate the power and nature of this letter, and observe the position of the organs of speech during its formation. The advocates of the latter opinion have evidently forgotten that initial w is always followed by one or other of the vowels, forming diphthongs of easy pronunciation; and that o͝o-all, o͝o-ill, &c., separately pronounced, however rapidly, are dissyllables, o͝oall, o͝oill, &c. (i. e., wall, will, &c.), are monosyllables; the difference lying in the initial action of one vowel on the other, following from the glide of the voice which constitutes the very nature of a diphthong. The reason initial w and y require the article 'a', instead of 'an', before them, has been philosophically, and we think correctly, explained by Mr Knowles.

[18] Initial y has the sound of ē or e; and, like w, owes its apparent consonantal character to the peculiar conditions under which it is always uttered. Bishop Lowth insists upon y being always a 'vowel'; Knowles, and several other orthoëpists, hold the same opinion. Dr Latham remarks: 'This sound (y) is evidently allied to the sound of ee in feet; some writers consider it identical. It is, however, convenient to regard' it (as well as initial w) 'as a separate independent sound'. See Note 17.

[19] A letter of which the power is a strong breathing or forcible propulsion of unvocalised breath, which becomes vocal in the vowel element that follows it. Some grammarians deny its claim to be regarded as a 'consonant'; but any attempt to invalidate this claim militates with equal force against some other letters, whose title, in this respect, is undisputed.

CONSONANTS—Continued.

28.	The sound of f	in *f*it, sa*f*e	= f	} [20]
29.	" v	" *v*an, vain, save	= v
30.	" l	" *l*ip, fi*ll*	= l
31.	" r	" *r*ill, *r*ow, tri*ll* [21]	= r
32.	" r	" ca*r*, ba*r*e, fir*m* [21]	= r
33.	" ng	" ki*ng*, so*ng*, hu*ng* [22]	= ng
34.	" n	" *n*et, see*n*	= n
35.	" m	" *m*at, gleam	= m

From the above elementary sounds certain COMPOUND SOUNDS are formed, of which ten [23] deserve a separate notice. Of these, four are produced by the close union in utterance of pairs of 'simple vowels', four by a like coalescence of triplets of 'simple vowels', and two by a like union and utterance of pairs of consonants:—

COMPOUND VOWELS:—1. DIPHTHONGS.

1.	The sound of i	in t*ie*, p*ine*, m*ind* [24]	= ĭ or ȳ
2.	" oi or oy	" *oi*l, v*oice*, b*oy* [25]	= oi or oy
3.	" ou or ow	" h*ou*se, c*ow* [26]	= ou or ow
4.	" u or ew	" m*u*se, t*une*, n*ew* [27]	= ū or yo͞o

2. TRIPHTHONGS.

1.	The sound of i	in k*ind*, gu*ide* [28]	= ʼī
2.	" wi	" w*ine* [29]	= wī
3.	" woi or woy	" b*woy*, q*uoit* [30]	= woy
4.	" wou	" w*ound* [31]	= wou or wow

DOUBLE CONSONANTS OR CONSONANT-DIPHTHONGS.

1.	The sound of ch	in *ch*est, mu*ch*, *ch*urch [32]	= ch (tsh)
2.	" j or g	" *j*est, *g*em, ra*ge* [33]	= j (dzh)

[20] The reason of f and v, as well as the twelve preceding consonants, being linked in 'pairs', is given at page xviii.

[21] These sounds are really distinct and different, although allied to each other; whilst the seats and mode of their formation are more apart and distinct, than is the case of several other pairs of allied consonants, which no one has ever doubted were separate and independent articulations. The same 'symbol' may, however, be safely used to express both of these letters, in English, since their position—initial or final, immediately indicates which of them is intended.

[22] A single elementary sound, into which that of neither letter of the digraph enters. The same remark applies to the sounds represented by sh, zh, and th, in the above Table.

[23] This number might be extended by the addition of the diphthongs, &c., formed by w and y with vowels, which are true diphthongs, though otherwise classed by many orthoëpists. Knowles enumerates twenty-five diphthongs; Walker, twenty-eight; many of the latter are, however, merely ocular, as are all the six triphthongs given by Mr Walker in his Table. A rigid analysis shews that all the long vowels are diphthongal. See Section 4.

[24] Its elements are the sound of a in fat, followed by that of e in he, or y in yet, with the accent on the first element. When the first element is lengthened into the a in father, and much rested on, the resulting diphthong is either the vulgar provincial i, or the old adverb and interjection ay (ah'e).

[25] Its elements are the a in all, and the e in eve or feet, with the accent on the first. In oyster, voice, &c., the first element is somewhat shortened.

[26] Its elements are the sound of a in all, followed by that of oo in foot (o͝o), or the u in bull (the w in will—Latham), with the accent on the first element.

[27] Its elements are the i in pit, followed by the o in who, or the oo in woo and coo (o͞o; the w in will—Latham), with the accent on the second element. In unit, union, &c., the first element is somewhat prolonged (= e or ē), and the diphthongal character of the compound rendered much more distinct, being then equivalent in sound to the pronoun you.

[28] It consists of the faint sound, ə, of a partly suppressed e, represented by (ʼ), and the diphthongal i. See Section 27.

[29] Its elements are o͝o-ĭ or o͝o-ăhē (wĭ).

[30] Its elements are o͝o-ăwē or o͝o-oy (woy).

[31] Its elements are o͝o-ăwo͝o or o͝o-ow (wow).

[32] Its elements are t-sh.

[33] Its elements are d-zh.

The ELEMENTARY SOUNDS constituting language are formed by means of the breath passing through the throat and mouth, and being more or less acted upon, during its passage, by the tongue, palate, teeth, lips, and other organs of speech. These sounds are commonly and conveniently divided by grammarians into two great classes; viz., Vowels and Consonants.

3. A VOWEL[34], or vocal sound, is a simple sound formed by one impulse or stroke of the breath or voice, and one opening of the mouth, to give that impulse a form and free passage, without any particular movement or contact, and only a position of the organs. In written language, a Vowel is a 'symbol' or 'letter' which represents such a sound.

The Vowels of the English alphabet are a, e, i, o, and u; and w and y, which are mere duplicate forms of sounds represented by other vowels, or which, according to many grammarians, are vowels only when medial or final. These letters, only six[35] in number, either alone or combined, are employed in practice to represent the twelve simple vowels heard in the 'spoken language'; whilst two of them (i, u), in addition, often represent the diphthongs phonetically expressed by ī or ȳ, and ū, ew, or yo͞o.

The Vowels of the common alphabet were formerly divided by grammarians into two classes—SIMPLE OR PURE VOWELS, a, e, o; and COMPOUND OR IMPURE VOWELS, i, y, u, and w; but a more exact and philosophical classification is founded on the seat of their formation, or with reference to the organs chiefly employed in giving them their characteristic forms, beginning at the larynx, and proceeding along the palate to the lips, as exhibited in the following TABLE:—

Guttural	ā (āw), ă or ŏ (ăw̆)	Palatal	ä, ĕ	Labial	ŏ, ŭ
	ā (ah), ă or ä		ē, ĭ		o͞o, o͝o[36]

The ORGANIC FORMATION of the VOWELS is a subject which is both curious and instructive, and of sufficient importance to demand a brief notice in every work on orthoëpy. If we 'trace the letters to their seat', and, as it were, 'touch the sounds which we articulate', we shall find that—

In sounding ā (ā*w*) the tongue is drawn back toward the opening of the glottis, and contracted or depressed about its root, leaving a considerable cavity between it and the palate; the mouth is opened in a nearly circular form, and wider than for any other vowel; and the impulse or stroke of the voice is directed against the extreme back part of the palate, near the passage through which the breath, rendered vocal by the larynx, issues.

In sounding ā (ā*h*) the tongue is slightly widened, and much advanced toward the teeth, at the same time that it is raised toward the palate, by which the space between the two is considerably diminished; the mouth is closed a little more than for ā; and the stroke of the voice is less full, and somewhat more advanced along the palate.

In sounding ä (ä*e*) the tongue is spread out on both sides toward the cheeks, and raised still higher toward the palate, leaving a shallow space only between the two; the aperture of the lips is dilated, horizontally, to a lengthened oval; and the stroke of the voice is more advanced toward the teeth than for ā or ā, and the resulting sound thus rendered slenderer, or less full and hollow, than either of them.

In sounding ē the tongue is advanced rather nearer to the lips, and is still more elevated or swelled up toward the palate than in sounding ā; indeed, so much so, as to reduce the space between it and the palate to the shallowest possible channel compatible with the free passage of the breath, but without the slightest contact of the organs; the aperture of the mouth is still further extended sidewise, and the lips are brought closer together; whilst, as a consequence, the stroke of the voice reaches the palate nearer to the teeth, and issues, as it were, horizontally from the mouth, as a sound even slenderer than ä.

[34] From the French voyelle, a vowel; a word derived from the Latin, voca'lis, a vowel, from vocalis, vocal.

[35] Viz., a, e, i, o, u, and w; 'y' being regarded as merely a duplicate form of i or e.

In sounding ō the tongue is advanced a little more into the middle of the mouth, its point 'is thickened and turned down on the palate of the under jaw', and a groove or channel is formed by the swelling up of its sides, toward the middle, over which the voice passes; the lips are somewhat protruded, forming a circular aperture corresponding with that of the tongue; whilst the cavity within the mouth, which receives the stroke of the voice, is so great as to render the resulting sound a full one, notwithstanding the strong action of the lips on it, as it escapes between them.

In sounding o͞o the form and position of the tongue is the same as in sounding ō; but the lips are rather more protruded, and their sides are brought closer together, by which the aperture is slightly lessened; whilst the stroke of the voice is directed as far as possible toward the lips.

In sounding ă or ŏ (aw), ă, ĕ, ĭ, ŭ, and o͝o, the organs assume the same forms and positions as for the correspondent 'long' or 'open' vowels; but they are more rapidly pronounced, and the sound is suddenly 'stopped' or abruptly cut off, and, as it were, modified by the following consonant, in a manner, and in a degree as to completeness of effect on the ear, varying with the class to which the particular consonant belongs.

The Vowels, with reference to their use in the pronunciation of words, may be divided into—long and short vowels:

The Long Vowels[37] occur under two conditions, in which, though always long, they vary as to their length:—

(a.) Long or open—as when they are accented, and have their full alphabetic sounds; which occurs when they are final in an accented syllable, or medial if followed by a consonant and e mute, and in some other cases: as in ba'sis, bāne; mē, mēte; sō, hōpe'ful; &c.

(b.) Alphabetic—as heard in repeating the alphabet with ease and moderate rapidity, or when they are open but unaccented, and (except w and y) though still retaining sounds corresponding to their names, are not so fully and clearly pronounced as when under the accent, or when marked with the long quantity: as in obey', proclaim', monop'oly, &c.

The Short Vowels may be regarded under two distinct senses of the adjective—brief vowels, and stopped vowels:—

(a.) Brief—as when the sound terminates rapidly, but not abruptly: as the y in happy. They differ from the 'open vowels' chiefly in their length.

(b.) Stopped—as when the sound terminates abruptly, or is suddenly arrested, and, as it were, 'cut off', by a following consonant: as in cot, hăt, pit'y, &c. These are the true 'short vowels'.[38]

4. A Diphthong[39] is a compound vowel-sound composed of two elements, which are produced by one stroke or emission of the breath, and thus coalesce, or are so

[37] The usual conventional methods of shewing that a vowel is long, when this is not indicated by its position, is—1, by adding a mute e at the end of the word or syllable, as băt, bāte: —2, by doubling the vowel, as fēd, fēed:—3, by adding a second vowel, and thus giving the combination the appearance of a diphthong, as rēd, rēad.

[38] The usual conventional methods of shewing that a vowel is 'short' or 'stopped', is by doubling the following consonant, as in egg, toss, fill, happy; but this is seldom necessary in monosyllables or final syllables ending with a consonant, and containing only a single vowel; as, in English, the latter is necessarily 'stopped' by position.

[39] Diphthong'us, Latin; from the Greek, δίς, double, and φθογγομαι, I sound.

closely united in utterance, as to exhibit but one 'radical' and one 'vanishing' movement of the voice, forming a third compound vocal-sound, capable, like a single vowel, of performing the function of a syllable. In its expression there is a manifest effort to condense the consecutive vowel-elements into one sound, or to pronounce them so far simultaneously, as to form but one syllable, instead of two, as in the usual condition of their distinct utterance. During this effort 'there is an initial action of the one vowel on the other, following from a "glide" of the voice heard while the mouth is passing from the position required for one vowel to that required for the other.' 'The second vowel may be prolonged, and is always the longer of the two'[40]; and the stress or accent may rest on either element, though always on the same element in the same diphthong. The term is also popularly, though not correctly, applied to any vowel-digraph.[41]

A TRIPHTHONG[42] is a compound vowel-sound composed of three elements, so uttered as to make but one syllable to the ear. Its definition and vocal expression are essentially the same as those of a diphthong, if extended to three elements. The term is also popularly, though incorrectly, applied to any vowel-trigraph.[43]

5. A CONSONANT[44], or an ARTICULATION[45], is an interruption, or interception, either partial or complete, of the effusion of the breath or the voice, arising from the application of some of the organs of speech to each other, or from some particular motion of at least one of them, by which an obscure sound only is emitted, or the effusion of the breath or voice either wholly withheld or suddenly arrested, or otherwise modified; the precise nature of the resulting sound, or, in some cases, of the modification of the immediately preceding or following one, depending on the particular organs employed, and the character and extent of their peculiar action. Hence, from the mode of their formation, many of the consonants cannot be perfectly or fully uttered, and a few of them[46], cannot be uttered at all, without the aid of a vowel; whilst not one of them by itself can form even the shortest word, and, with the exception of those of their number called 'liquids'[47], not even the shortest syllable. In written language, a Consonant is a 'symbol' or 'letter' representing an articulate sound.

The Consonants of the English 'spoken language' are enumerated in the 'Table of Elementary Sounds'[48]; those of the common alphabet are—b, c, d, f, g, h, j, k, l, m, n, p, q, r, s, t, v, x, z; and, according to some writers, initial w and y.

The Consonants may be distributed into classes, as in the following TABLES:—

Mutes[49] { pure, k, p, t.
impure, b, d, g hard (g).

[40] Ellis.

[41] The terms Oral, Spoken, or Proper diphthongs, have been applied to those in which both the written elements are sounded, or in which a diphthongal sound is represented by a single letter (as I or ū); and Ocular or Improper diphthongs, to those in which one only of the written elements are sounded.

[42] From τρεις, three, and φθογγη, sound.

[43] The only true triphthongs in English, are those formed by the union of a simple initial vowel with a diphthong, as in those numbered 2, 3, 4, in the Table at page xiii. If initial w and y be regarded as consonants, there is no true oral triphthong, such as the German aeu, in English; nor is there, strictly speaking, such a sound in French, unless the 'ieu' of that language be so considered. Our improper triphthongs (trigraphs) having, at most, but two sounds, are classed, by several grammarians, with diphthongs.

[44] Con'sŏnans, Latin; from con-, with or together, and sŏ'nans, sounding; because it requires the help of a vowel or a diphthong to sound it fully and clearly.

[45] From articula'tio, Latin, a joint, a consonant; because it is the chief means of distinctness and variety in speech.

[46] As the pure 'sharp mutes', k, p, t.

[47] L, m, n, r.

[48] See page xii.

[49] Latham, and some other writers, include p, b, f, v, t, d, th (sharp and flat), k, g hard, s, z, sh, and zh, among the 'mutes'; or all the consonants except the liquids, and h, and ng.

In explanation of the terms used in the above Tables, it may be stated, that—

A MUTE is a close 'articulation' which modifies the voice, but has no distinct sound of itself, and of which the utterance is perceived by its effect on other elements of speech, rather than by its own sound. A Pure mute is one whose sound cannot be at all prolonged:—an Impure mute, one whose sound may be continued or prolonged, though only for a brief space of time.

A SEMIVOWEL is an 'articulation' which may be continued at pleasure, like a long vowel, of whose nature it so far partakes. A Vocal semivowel is formed wholly, or chiefly, by the 'voice'; being, in the former case, called Pure; in the latter, from having a mixture of 'breath', Impure. An Aspirated semivowel is formed entirely by the 'breath'.

A BREATHING, or Aspirate, is a mere effusion of the 'breath', either wholly free, or but slightly acted on by the organs.

An EXPLODENT is an 'articulation' marked by the sudden occlusion of the 'voice' during utterance; or by the sudden bursting forth of the voice, as it were explosively, after such interruption or occlusion.

A CONTINUANT is one of those 'articulations' commonly called 'semivowels'.

A LIQUID is a 'semivowel', so named from possessing the property of readily uniting with the other consonants, particularly the 'mutes', and 'flowing', as it were, into their sounds.

A NASAL is a 'semivowel' which is uttered through the nose, instead of through the lips, as with the other consonants, and the vowels.

Another classification of the Consonants based on the seat of their formation, or on the organs chiefly engaged in producing them, is exhibited in the following TABLES:—

Labials[53] { pure, p, b. / labio-dental, f, v. / labio-nasal, m.

Dentals[54] { pure, th sharp (th), th flat (th). / dento-palatal, t, d, s, z, sh, zh, l. / dento-nasal, n. / compound, ch (tsh), g soft or j (j, dzh).

[50] On the propriety of classing initial w and y with the 'consonants', see Notes 17, 18, &c.

[51] The classification of the consonants in this Table, is founded on that commonly adopted by writers on orthoëpy.

[52] The arrangement adopted in this Table, is founded on that given by Mr Ellis in his 'Etkmical Orthography'.

[53] The pure labials are formed entirely by the 'lips'; the labio-dentals, by the 'under lip' and the 'upper teeth'; the labio-nasals, by the 'lips' only, but the sound passes through the 'nose'.

[54] The pure dentals are formed by placing the tip of the tongue between the 'teeth'; the dento-palatals, by the application of the tongue to the gums of the 'upper teeth', or to the 'palate' near them; the dento-nasals, in a like manner, but the sound is thrown through the

labio-nasal, m.

Or (and perhaps more correctly):—

Labials[53], p, b, m.
Labio-dentals[53], f, v.
Dentals[54], th sharp (th), th flat (th).

Gutturals[56], h, (provincial guttural) r.
Nasals[57], m, n, ng.

The Consonants, irrespective of the 'liquids', and 'h' and 'ng', may also be divided into two great classes—sharp or thin, and—flat or thick; those of the second class being distinguished from those of the first by the addition of a portion of 'voice', or a sort of guttural murmur; the one being, as it were, simply the 'thickened' sounds of the others.[58] The consonants that thus fall into pairs are the following:—

	Pure mutes.	Whispered.	Compound.
Sharp or Thin, .	k, p, t;	s, sh, th (th), f;	ch (tsh).
Flat or Thick, .	g hard, b, d;	z, zh, th (th), v;	g soft or j (dzh).
	Spoken.		Compound.

'nose'. The compound dentals, consist of two articulations closely united, like a diphthong, in utterance.

[55] The palatals are formed by the application of different parts of the tongue to different parts of the 'palate', extending from the upper gums to the extreme roof of the mouth. The compound palatals are consonant diphthongs.

[56] The gutturals are formed in or modified by an effort of the 'throat'. There are no deep or true gutturals in English. Of the two given in the TABLES, one is provincial or vulgar, and the other doubtful; they might, probably, be better called palato-gutturals.

[57] The nasals are so called, because their sounds pass through the 'nose' instead of the lips. In the labio-nasals, this is caused by the closure of the lips; in the dento-nasals, the breath is thrown through the 'nose', whilst the tongue rests against the upper gums; in the pure nasal ng (also sometimes, though incorrectly, called a dento-guttural), the voice is thrown from the throat or glottis directly through the 'nose'.

[58] Holder remarks, that when we only whisper, we cannot distinguish the first rank of these consonants from the corresponding members of the second. ('Elements of Speech'.) 'It is certain that the difference between them is very nice; the upper letters seeming to have only a smarter, brisker appulse of the organs than the lower'. 'The most marked distinction', however, 'between them will be found to be a sort of guttural murmur, which precedes the latter letters when we wish to pronounce them forcibly, but not the former'; a difference which 'may be more perceived in the s and z, than in any other of the letters'. (Walker.)

A knowledge of the difference between the powers of the two classes of consonants just referred to, is of the highest importance to those who desire to pronounce correctly; since, owing to the nature of their organic formation, those of the one class, when joined with those of the other, in the same syllable—a union of common occurrence in writing, form a combination of sounds which is absolutely unpronounceable, if each sound indicated by the letters remains unchanged. In order to be pronounced, one of the sounds of such a combination must change its character, and so accommodate itself to the other. This occurs in one of two ways—either the first of the two sounds assumes the sharpness or flatness peculiar to the 'second', or the second assumes the sharpness or flatness peculiar to the 'first'. Thus, abt becomes pronounceable either by changing the b into p, forming 'apt', or the t into d, forming

The ORGANIC FORMATION of the CONSONANTS is a subject of even higher importance than the organic formation of the vowels, since without a knowledge of it, it is impossible either to correct our own errors of articulation, or to impart to others, particularly foreigners, the true nature of those sounds of which they are wholly ignorant, or which they articulate imperfectly.

The mechanical movements and positions of the organs of speech by which the several consonant-sounds of our language are produced, are, with the single exception of ng, described in their alphabetical places in the body of this Dictionary. The omitted one (ng) is formed in the same seat of sound as g hard; but while the middle of the tongue presses the roof of the mouth, as for g, the voice passes principally, or wholly, through the nose, as in pronouncing n.

II. FIRST PRINCIPLES or ELEMENTS of PRONUNCIATION—Letters and combinations of letters, their sounds, mutual influence, &c., as exhibited in the formation of syllables and words, and as modified by Accent or its absence.

The English alphabet, as already noticed, is not merely defective in possessing an insufficient number of 'symbols' to represent all the sounds of the 'spoken language', but many of its symbols or letters are employed to represent two or more sounds; whilst the same simple sound is frequently expressed in different words by different letters, and almost as frequently, by digraphs or combinations of them. These defects in the 'common alphabet', and the prevailing system of orthography, are so numerous, that the unlettered reader is not always sure of 'associating the right sound with the right sign'; whilst the uneducated writer is still more frequently embarrassed in determining the proper letters to be employed in the visible representation of these sounds, as combined into words. Many of the discrepancies thus existing between the written and the spoken word may be classified and reduced to rules, to all of which, however, many exceptions will still exist; but others are wholly irregular, and can only be met by a knowledge and a constant recollection of the 'sounds' on the one hand, and the 'letters' on the other, arbitrarily assigned by usage to each.

The sounds of the letters and their leading combinations, regular and irregular, are noticed in the following Sections:

'abd'; ashd, by like changes, becomes either 'asht' or 'azhd'; and so of other like combinations.

'This change is necessary and universal. It holds good not for the English alone, but for all languages. The only difference is, that different languages change different letters; that is, one language accommodates the first letter to the second, whilst another accommodates the second letter to the first'. (Latham.) In English, the latter chiefly occurs. Thus, the d in beads and the g in stags are 'flat', whilst the s in each is 'sharp', exhibiting a combination that can exist in spelling only; for in speech the s is changed into z, a sound corresponding in flatness with the d and g, and these words are pronounced as if they were written beadz and stagz. In like manner cabs is pronounced cabz; lads, ladz; loaves, lōvez; &c. Similar changes occur in kissed, looked, plucked, tossed, wished, and thousands of other like words, which are respectively pronounced (the e being silent) hist, lookt, plukt, tost, wisht; but here the change is the reverse of that in the first examples, being from a flat consonant to a 'sharp' one.

'There is no fact that requires to be more familiarly known than this' change of the consonants above noticed; 'since there are at least three formations in the English language where its influence is most important. These are the possessive forms in -s, the plurals in -s, and the preterites in d and t'. 'Neither are there many facts in language more disguised than this is disguised in English'. (Latham.)

VOWELS.

6. Long a (ā)[1]; the first sound of the first letter of the alphabet, corresponding to its name, and that which it bears in almost every word or syllable, and almost every syllable of words in which it precedes a consonant, and sometimes, even two consonants, followed, in each case, by a final silent e in the same syllable, as in base, face, lade, hate, name, change, range, haste, waste, &c.[2]; and in almost every word of more than one syllable, in which it is final, with the accent on it, as in pa'per, ma'tron, crea'tion, specta'tor, &c.[3]

A is also often preserved long by a following vowel, particularly i, as in gain, pain, stain; and sometimes even by a preceding one, as in bear, pear, swear, &c. This sound of a also occurs, 'contrary to every rule of pronunciation', in their, there, where, and in the 'anomalous diphthong ao in gaol'; whilst 'there is a corrupt, but received pronunciation of this letter in the words any, many, Thames, where it sounds like ĕ'.[4]

When long a (ā) occurs before r in the same syllable, as in bare, fare, pair, parent, &c., its sound is so lengthened by the guttural vibration of the r, and the 'radical' and 'vanishing' movements of the voice become so apparent, that though organically the same as the a in fate, the effect on the ear is more or less diphthongal—a fact which, in careless and affected speakers, frequently induces the error of breaking up the vowel into two distinct parts, and thus imparting to syllables in which it occurs, a dissyllabic character.[5]

Long a (ā) accented, occurring in a word of two or more syllables before r, or in an antepenultimate syllable before any consonant (except c, s, or t) followed by e or i (not silent), and another vowel, or a vowel and a consonant, usually unites itself to the consonant in utterance, forming a long accented syllable, whilst the e or i either forms a short syllable by itself, or unites with the following vowel, forming a species of y-diphthong; as in dairy (dārĕ'-e), hār'em, vār'y, Austrāl'ian (-yăn), Bacchanāl'ia (-y'ă), instantān'eous (-e-ŭs), grammār'ian (-e-ăn), sectār'ian, &c.[6]

7. The long 'Italian' a (ā, ăh)[7] is always heard in monosyllables before r, and in every accented syllable of words in which it occurs before r followed by another consonant either in the same or the beginning of the succeeding syllable, as bar, car, far, farm, hark, marsh, bar'ter, farm'er, mar'tyr, par'liament, &c.; also before h, as ah, Brah'ma; before lm in the same syllable, as calm (kăhm), psalm

[1] Commonly called by grammarians the long or slender English a.

[2] The chief exceptions are—are, bade (prt. of 'bid'), and have; to which may be added gape, if the pronunciation (gahpe) of Knowles, Walker, and Webster be adopted.

[3] The exceptions are—fa'ther, mama, papa, which have the 'Italian' a; and wa'ter, which has the 'broad German' a; and, perhaps, one or two others. Master, given as an exception by Walker, is now always pronounced mahs'-tĕr, and not mah'-stĕr, as stated in his dictionary. Father is also similarly divided by many speakers, and is so 'notated' by Mr Smart. Rather, as often heard, resembles 'father', and, according to Jamieson and Knowles, forms another exception.

[4] Walker.—So also of a, or ai, in the first syllable of maintain' (mĕn-).

[5] Speakers of the class referred to commonly say bā'-ĕr, fā'-ĕr, pā'e-rĕnt, &c., instead of fare, pārĕ'-ĕnt, &c.; errors, or rather vulgarisms, which cannot be too carefully avoided.

[6] Not va'ry, instants'neous, gramma'rian, secta'rian, &c., as these words are commonly marked in dictionaries, no such a division of most of them existing naturally in the spoken language. Some words of the class referred to may, however, be pronounced both ways; and a few, but only a few, may not be improved by adopting the Rule. The relative ease of utterance, and the ear of the speaker, will in general prove a sufficient guide. This blending of the vowel with the r in utterance, also occurs with other long vowels.

[7] Called by some grammarians and orthoëpists the 'middle a'.

(sā'lm), psalm'ist[8]; before u followed by n and another consonant, as aunt, launch, saun'ter[9]; sometimes before lf, lve, and gh sounded like f, as half (hāf), calf (kāf), salve (sā'lve), laugh (lāf); and before th sharp, as bath (bāth), lath, path, &c.; and in father[10].

This sound of a (ā) was also formerly much used before the nasal liquid n, particularly when followed by c, t, or d, in such words as dance, glance, lance, chant, grant, plant, slander, command, &c.[11]; and before f and s, instead of ă or ă, in ask, class, glass, grasp, craft, graft, &c.; a practice now regarded, except in a very few words, as vulgar or provincial.[12]

When ā occurs in the same syllable, after k, or g or c hard, it is organically softened by the apparent intervention of a half-suppressed e, the causation of which belongs to the consonant, as explained elsewhere. This faint sound, or effect, is indicated in our 'notation' by an apostrophe (') placed before the vowel. It is one which can never be omitted in clear and polite pronunciation; although its exaggeration borders on affectation or vulgarity. Thus, card, cart, guard, regard, &c., when clearly and elegantly pronounced, are k'ārd, k'ārt, g'ārd, reg'ārd, &c.; not kārd, kārt, &c., nor ke-ārd, ge-ārd, &c., as sometimes heard among affected speakers, and on the stage.[13]

8. The long 'broad' or 'German' a (ā, āw, ă*w*)[14] is heard before ll in monosyllables, in the final syllables of words ending in ll, and in their formatives and compounds, whether these drop one of the l's in composition, or not, as all, call, fall, stall, thrall, albeit, instal, instalment, thraldom, &c.; and, in monosyllables and accented syllables, before one l final, followed by any consonant but p, b, f, and v, except generally, in words from the Latin and Greek and certain foreign languages, as bald, false, salt, bal'sam, fal'con, fal'ter, psal'ter (sawl'-), &c.[15]; also in every case in which a comes before w, or before u not followed in the same syllable by n and another consonant, or by gh sounded as f, as in the anomalous diphthongs aw and au, in bawl, dawn, law, awe, laud, sauce, caught, taught, &c.[16]; also after w or q when the vowel is followed by l or r, or by two consonants of which l or r is one, as walk, war, ward, warm, warn, swarm, warble, warden, war'lock, quality, &c.; and in the first syllable of water.[17]

[8] But not in pedhuod'ic, pedl'modist, pedl'mody, &c., for the reason named in the text, and on account of their direct formation from the Greek. See Section 45.

[9] Except in saunt and avaunt, and two or three others, which have the German a (aw), or the common sound of the diphthong au.

[10] See Note 3 (above).

[11] In command, demand, remand, &c., usage is divided, the Italian a being even now used in these words by many good speakers.

[12] Formerly bravado, farrago, lumbago, tornado, and a few other like words of classical or foreign parentage, were pronounced with the 'Italian a'; but except in bravo (well done!), and sometimes, in bravado, this is now no longer heard. This sound of the a, derived from our ancestors, is still retained in America, in many words in which it has long been obsolete or vulgar among ourselves. Thus, we have often been unable to discover, except by the context, whether an American speaker alluded to his 'aunt' or to an 'ant.'

[13] See Sections 27, 12, 14, &c.

[14] See Sections 2, 11, 17, 26.

[15] But not in Alps, Albion, Alcoran, Alfred, asphalt, asphalt'ic, asphalt'um, amal'gam, amal'gamate, cal'culate, psaltēr'ium, &c., which have ă, according to Rule.

[16] The chief exceptions are maundril, Maundy (Thursday), vaunt and avaunt, and maund (accor. to K., P., & Sh.), which retain the 'broad' a (aw); hautboy (Fr., hautbois) where au is sounded like ō; laurel where, from the influence of accent, it is contracted into ăw or ō; cauliflower, laudanum, &c., which are often similarly shortened; and perhaps a few others.

The a in quaver and equator, is preserved long and slender by the influence of accent.

[17] 'Many words pronounced with a broad were anciently written with au, as sault, mault; and as we still write fault and vault. This was probably the true Saxon sound, for it is yet retained in the northern dialects, and in the rustic pronunciation'. (Johnson.)

'In some words, as salt, cobalt, &c., the a is not so broad as in all, nor so short as in what; but in respect to this nicer distinction the ear must decide'. (Webster.)

'In some words where custom makes the sound something short, as for instance, in salt

9. The 'short' or 'stopped' a (ă)[18] heard in fat, hat, happy, &c., generally occurs in monosyllables before any final consonant but r, before any two successive consonants (with the exceptions noticed in the preceding Sections), and commonly, in an accented syllable, before a final consonant (subject to the same exceptions), and even r, if a vowel follow, or (except in 'formatives' from 'primitives' ending in r[19]) the r be doubled; as cab, pan, cat, catty, capsule, fam'ine, ar'id, car'ry, mar'ry, tar'ry, &c.[20]

In many words in which ă occurs before f, s, st, or n, there is a slight tendency to broadness, which is 'not quite in unison with the mode of indication'; as may be perceived in an elegant and unaffected pronunciation of craft, graft, staff, class, clasp, grasp, grass, last, past, chant, plant, command, demand, remand, and other like words; whilst many speakers substitute the 'brief' sound of ā (i. e., ă or ăh), and even ā itself, for the 'stopped' one, in all or nearly all these words. 'This broadness is' (in England) 'a decided vulgarism when it identifies the sound with ā (ăh)', or even approximates to it. 'The exact sound, in every instance, lies between the one indicated, and the vulgar corruption'.[21] In a few, and only a few words, should it even extend to the sound indicated by ă (ăh).[22] Nautical words, as aft, abaft, avast, &c., in the mouth of nautical speakers, are allowable exceptions to the Rule.

The sound of short or stopped a (like that of ĕ, ĭ, ŏ, ў), in unaccented syllables, except when it begins a word, and is followed by a doubled consonant, with the accent on the second syllable[23], is relatively fainter and obscurer than in accented syllables[24]; but only in a few cases sanctioned by usage, and then chiefly colloquially, should it be allowed to lose its distinctive character, or to degenerate into the sound of ŭ in tub.[25]

Before r final in unaccented syllables, and in accented syllables when the r is not doubled either in spelling (except in 'formatives') or in pronunciation, or is followed by any other consonant, the a, though apparently short by position, is relatively 'unstopped' and either open or brief, as already noticed[26]; and in unaccented final syllables, is relatively obscure, as noticed in Sections 10, 25, &c.

malt, &c., it seems almost immaterial whether we denote the pronunciation thus, sawlt, mawlt; or thus, sölt, mölt'. (Smart.)

[18] This is the 'short' or 'stopped' sound of the Italian a, though usually confounded with that of the long or slender a.

[19] The a in all such 'formatives', like the other vowels, remains long, as in their 'primitives', notwithstanding the r is doubled in the written word. Thus, tarry (besmeared with tar) is pronounced tahr'-e; whilst tarry (to abide), which is not such a 'formative', is pronounced with the vowel short, tăr'-re. See Section 26.

[20] The a before the r or rr in these words, when correctly pronounced, is precisely the same as the short, stopped a in hat; but, owing to the peculiar nature of the consonant, the sound is scarcely so suddenly or abruptly arrested to the ear as it is by the other consonants, particularly the pure mutes. Any utterance of this sound which destroys its stopped character, or which approaches even in the smallest degree to the a in far, is a decided vulgarism. In our 'notation' this sound is usually marked ä, sometimes ă; but where, from oversight, this is not done, the position of the vowel and the accent indicates its true character, and render its mispronunciation impossible.

[21] Mr Smart.

[22] See Note 11, &c.

[23] Here the ă is preserved pure, as in assign', attract', &c.

[24] See Section 25.

[25] But though an obscure or indistinct pronunciation of the stopped vowels, in unaccented syllables, is a vice in speech which cannot be too strongly censured, the contrary error is equally open to objection. 'A carefully distinct utterance of unaccented syllables, is often an elegance; but here' (referring to the 'stopped' vowels in unaccented final syllables) 'it would convey the impression of childish pedantry' (Smart); or, we may add, of illiterate affectation, or rustic vulgarity. Thus, gen'tleman', no'bleman', &c., are pedantic and vulgar pronunciations of these words; and gen'tlemŭn, no'blemŭn, &c., are certainly not less so; although the latter are given by Sheridan and Walker, and by Knowles and their other followers. But usage, in this respect, has greatly changed among polite speakers since the time of these writers. See Section 25.

10. The brief 'Italian' a (ă, ăh)[27] is generally heard when the vowel occurs in open, unaccented syllables, as papa', bana'na, fari'na, ab'ecus, Amer'ica, Messi'ah; and commonly before r in an unaccented syllable, as in ce'dar, an'archy, an'cillary, mon'arch, mon'archy, &c. It is also the sound which a always assumes, in easy and rapid utterance, when used as an article or preposition, as in the phrases 'what 's a clock?' 'once a year', 'I am a going', &c.[28]

11. The short sound of the 'broad' or 'German' a (ă, ăw, ăw) is heard when the vowel occurs after w, and, generally, after q, and is followed or stopped by any single consonant or consonant-sound but k, g hard, ng, or f, or by some double letter or digraph, as x or nk, that includes the sound of one of them; also after w or q when followed by a doubled consonant, or by two consonants in the same syllable, of which neither r nor l is one; as in wad, wan, was, wasp, what, waddle, wallow, swallow, wanton, warrant, quad, quash, quality, quantity, quarrel, &c.[29]

12. The sound of long e (ē) is that which the vowel has when lengthened by e mute final, as in glebe, scheme, theme, severe, thee, &c.[30]; and when it ends an accented syllable, as in adhe'sion, se'cret, secre'tion, &c.; also at the end of monosyllables that have no other vowel, as be, he, me, she, we; at the end of words from the learned languages, not yet anglicised, as apos'trophe (-tro-fē), catas'trophe, epit'ome (-o-me), sim'ile, &c.[31]; and in the termination -es of like words, as anal'yses (-sēz), antip'odes (-dēz), aph'ides, Ha'des, ma'nes (-nēz), millep'edes (-dēz), &c., as noticed in Section 99.

E is also long when it occurs in monosyllables and final syllables immediately before another e followed by a consonant, as in deep, feet, meet, seen, auctioneer, pioneer[32]; also, generally, when it occurs in syllables followed in like manner by a, as in beam, feat, mean, treat, appear, beaver, creature; sometimes, when similarly followed by i, as in seine, seize, deceive, receive, either, neither, &c.; and before o in the word people; but, except with the first of these, the instances are numerous in which the e is short, or in which it is altogether silent, and either the second vowel of the written diphthong, otherwise silent, assumes its place, or a sound is given to the vowel combination which is proper to neither of its elements[33]. The vowel combinations æ and œ final in the accented syllables of classical words, and the frequent termination æ in Latin plurals, have always the sound of ē, and in the latter case, distinctly pronounced.[34]

The sound of long e before r is similarly lengthened and modified to that of ā (Section 6) and the other open vowels; and when occurring in an accented [27] This is merely the faint or obscure sound of long a(h), more or less shortened, and that into which the vowel naturally falls under the circumstances mentioned in the Text.

[28] The phonotype ă, in the 'notation' of this Dictionary, is used before r to represent both the stopped a and the obscure or brief Italian a (ăh); the difference between them being, however, clearly shewn by the presence of the accent in the first case, and its absence in the other. See Notes 20, 25.

[29] But not in waft, wax, thwack, twang, twank, quaff, quaggy, &c., in which the vowel is ă, according to the Rule. The Exceptions are few and doubtful—quass, quassation, quassia, quassine, have now generally ă; but are heard both ways.

[30] The exceptions are ere, there, where, in which the vowel has the sound of ā; and were, in which it has the sound of ĕ. In the article the, except before a word beginning with a vowel, it is usually brief, and more or less obscure.

[31] In these words, as usually pronounced, the e though long or open, is not so long as ē; and is expressed in the 'notation' of this Dictionary by the 'alphabetic' e, or e written without the mark of long quantity.

[32] Except in the poetical contractions e'er and ne'er, which are pronounced ăre, năre; and, perhaps, in two or three other words.

[33] For exceptions, &c., see Sections 6, 13, 24, 45.

syllable before r, or in an accented antepenultimate syllable before any consonant (except c, s, or t), under the conditions noticed in Section 6, it usually, or very frequently, coalesces with the following consonant in utterance in a like manner to that letter; as in mere, near, here, at'mosphere, fēr'ine, pēr'iod (-e-ūd), endēm'ial (-y'ăl), matēr'ial (-e-ăl), mȳstēr'ious (-e-ŭs), sēr'ious, Sibēr'ian (-e-ăn), &c.[35] So also, like i, when it occurs in an unaccented syllable before a vowel, and is not preceded by a 'dental', it very frequently unites with the following vowel, forming a species of y-diphthong, as in mal'leable (-y'ăbl), beauteous (būtē'-y'ŭs), gor''geous (-yŭs), cutān'eous (-y'ŭs), &c.[36]

13. The sound usually called short e (ĕ)[37] is that which the letter bears before any final consonant but r, and before a doubled consonant, or any two successive consonants of which r is not one; and generally, in accented syllables before any final consonant, including even r if a vowel follow, or (except in the case of 'formatives' from 'primitives' in r[38]), the r be doubled; as bet, men, red, egg, pett'y, dental, depth, resem'ble, clem'ency, mer'it, der'ogate, imper'ative, inher'itance, ber'ry, fer'ry, per'ry, &c.

The short or stopped sound represented by e (like ă, ĭ, ŏ, ŭ, ў) is relatively fainter and obscurer in unaccented, than in accented syllables; but (subject to the exceptions mentioned below) only in a few cases sanctioned by usage, does it lose its distinctive character[39], or degenerate into that of ŭ. The true sound appears to lie between the ă and ŭ, as heard in that and tub. When, however, this letter begins a word, and is followed by a doubled consonant, or by two consonants of which r is not one, with the accent on the second syllable, it preserves its regular short or stopped sound unaltered, as in effacé', embalm', explain', &c.[40]

The e before r final in unaccented syllables[41], and before r, or r followed by another consonant, in monosyllables, though conveniently represented by ĕ, is not identical with it, having, in the first case, an obscure sound approaching that of ŭ before r[42], as in perform', en'ter, remem'ber, read'er, wonder, &c.; and in the second, a longer sound caused by the palatal or guttural vibration of the r, in which the vowel, though lengthened and somewhat obscured, preserves, in correct pronunciation, rather more of its distinctive character, as in her, herd, berth, earth, &c.[42a]; the e, in each case, being relatively unstopped, as compared with the e in pet or men. In accented syllables, however, when the r is not doubled (except in 'formatives' from 'primitives' in r[43]), or is not followed by a vowel, and when it is followed by any other consonant, the e, though relatively [36] See Section 14, and particularly Note 67.

[37] This is, in reality, the 'short' or 'stopped' sound corresponding to the long, slender a (ā). See Sections 2, 6.

[38] See Note 19, which also applies here.

[39] In certain plurals ending in -es unaccented, the e is apt to slide into the softer sound of ĭ; as fa'ces (fās'-lz), prais'es (-lz), wages (-lz), &c. So of plurals in -ies, as cher'ries (-rlz), ladies (lā'-dlz), antiq'uities (-tlz), &c.; but here, chiefly by the silence of the e. A like change occurs under the accent in the word *E*ngland (Ing'-glănd), and is made by the vulgar in en'gine. Mr Walker extends this licence to many other kinds of words, as poet, covet, linen, duel, &c., a pronunciation now regarded as affected or vulgar.

'We may observe, that though the e goes into the short sound of i' (in the words referred to), 'it is exactly that sound which corresponds to the long sound of e' (Walker); the reverse, however, applies when the sound approaches that of ŭ.

[40] See Sections 9, 25.

[41] The e after r preceded by another consonant, as in cen'tre, me'tre, &c., falls under the same rule, these words being always pronounced, and sometimes spelled, center, meter, &c. So of acre, massacre, &c.; but here the orthography is never altered, as a change would lead to the softening of the e, and an erroneous pronunciation.

unstopped and lengthened, as in the second condition just referred to, preserves (except in a very few cases sanctioned by usage) its distinctive character nearly entire, as in fer'ment, mer'cy, per'sonal, eter'nal, &c.[44]; but if, in an accented syllable, the r be followed by a vowel, or doubled (except in 'formatives'), the e is 'stopped' by the r, as by any other consonant, and always preserves its pure, short sound unaltered[45]; the e, under all the conditions just noticed, being affected and modified by r in precisely the same manner as the other short vowels[46].

The e in certain unaccented final syllables in which it is short by position, is liable to suppression, as noticed below :—

a. The e in the -ed of the preterites of verbs, participles, and participial adjectives, when not preceded by d or t, is almost universally suppressed, and the final d, either pure, or changed to its corresponding sharp sound t, when necessary for union in utterance[47], is united to the preceding consonant forming one syllable ; as in barred (bărd), loved (lŭvd), composed' (-pōzd'), ebbed (ĕbd), faced (fāste), looked (lo͝okt), stuffed (stŭft), tossed (tŏst), vouched (vowcht), &c. But when these participles and adjectives are changed into adverbs by the addition of -ly, or into abstract substantives by the addition of -ness, they generally preserve the termination -ed entire ; as in confessed' (-fĕst'), confess'edly (-ĕd-le) ; designed' (-sīnd'), design'edly (-ĕd-le) ; prepared' (-pārd'), prepar'edly (-ĕd-le), prepar'edness (-ĕd-nĕs) ; fixed (fĭkst), fix'edness (-ĕd-nĕs), &c.[48]

This suppression of the e, with some exceptions chiefly colloquial, does not properly occur in adjectives in -ed which are not derived from verbs ; nor does it occur in bless'ed, curs'ed, learn'ed, wing'ed, and, perhaps, a few others, though verbals, when used as adjectives ; and all these retain the -ed entire in their 'formatives', but not in composition ; as a'ged, a'gedly (-jĕd-le), bless'ed, bless'edness, fork'ed, wing'ed, full-aged (-ājd'), three'-forked (-forkt), sheath'-winged (-wingd), &c.[49]

[44] The er in these words (and so of ir when similarly situated) is pronounced 'by the vulgar as ur; by the polite (except perchance in words of very common occurrence, as sir, stir, &c.), with a pronunciation which lies between ur and ŭr'. (Smart.)

The e in clerk, sergeant, and serjeant, has the sound of the long 'Italian' a ; and this appears to have formerly been the common sound of e before r, as still frequently heard in the proper names Derby (dar'-), Berkeley (bark'-), &c.

[45] The e in this case is never mispronounced, except by the most vulgar and ignorant. Thus, though the e in her, or'der, mer'cy, and fer'ry, are each expressed in our 'notation' by ĕ, the conditions as to accent or its absence, &c., under which it occurs, unmistakably fixes the pronunciation. See Notes 20, &c.

[46] See Sections 9, 10, 25-6, &c.

[47] See Note 58, page xviii.

[48] Attention to the points enumerated cannot be too frequently or strongly enforced on pupils and others desirous of speaking correctly ; as their neglect, in many cases, not merely borders on vulgarity, but leaves the meaning of the speaker obscure.

'This contraction of the participial -ed, and the verbal -en (see below), is so fixed an idiom of our pronunciation, that to alter it, would be to alter the sound of the whole language'. (Walker.)

It must, however, 'be carefully noted, that' (according to the prevailing usage of the pulpit) 'there is a remarkable exception to many of these contractions when we are pronouncing the language of Scripture: here every participial -ed ought to make a distinct syllable, where it is not preceded by a vowel : thus, "Who hath believ'ed our report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord reveal'ed"? Here the participles are both pronounced in three syllables ; but in the following passage. "Whom he did predestinate, them he also call'ed: and whom he call'ed, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified"; "called" preserves the e, and is pronounced in two syllables ; and "justified" and "glorified" suppress the e, and are pronounced in three syllables'. (Walker.) But in making the termination -ed a separate syllable, in the cases referred to, the greatest possible care must be taken to deliver it easily and naturally, and to avoid giving it more distinctness or importance in utterance than that which is due to it as a final and unaccented syllable. A contrary course destroys the effect intended, weakens the force of the other members of the sentence, and closely borders on affectation.

b. The e in -el, not preceded by a 'liquid', is sometimes suppressed, and sometimes not, in a manner scarcely reducible to rule[50].

c. The e in -en (with some exceptions) is generally suppressed when the vowel is not preceded by a 'liquid'; and always so in verbs and verbals, whether preceded by a liquid or not[50].

E is always mute at the end of English words[51], except in monosyllables that have no other vowel, and in unanglicised words from the learned languages[52], when it is long or alphabetic, and in certain foreign words[53]. This mute e is commonly used as an orthographic expedient to shew that the preceding vowel is long, as can, cāne, hat, hāte, &c.[54]; or to soften or modify a preceding consonant, as in force, rage, since, oblige, &c., where it shews that the c is sounded like s, and the g as j[55].

E is also mute or suppressed in the third person singular of verbs and the plurals of substantives in -ies, when the first person, or the substantive singular, ends in -y; as I reply', he replies (-plīze'); a reply, his replies (-plīze'); cher'ries (-rĭz), mar'ries (-rĭz), antiq'uities (-tĭz), &c.[56]

The e mute, at the end of substantives singular and the first persons of verbs, continues silent in their plurals and 'formatives', as theme, themes (thēmz), make, makes, &c.

Where ĕr, or the sound of e, followed by r (= ĕr, er) occurs in the same syllable after k, or g or c hard, there is the same organic softening of the vowel by the intervention of the slight sound indicated in our 'notation' by (') , as occurs with ār and ĭ; as (faintly) in k'ĕrn, k'ĕrchief, (more perceptibly in) g'irl (g'ĕrl), g'ird (g'ĕrd), &c.[57]

I.

14. Long i (ī, ÿ), as noticed in Section 2, is a pure diphthong, composed of the sound of ă or ă, and ĕ; and is precisely equivalent to the sound of the word eye (the organ of sight). This sound it always bears in monosyllables ending in silent e, as ice, hie, mine, shine, time, wife, shire, wire, &c.[58]; and in accented syllables, in which it is final, as bī'as, dī'gest, ī'tem, tī'tle, pī'ety, dī'alogue, vī'olate, &c.

I is also long in monosyllables ending with nd, as bind, find, mind, wind (to twist, to enfold)[59]; and, in monosyllables, before gh and ght, as in high (hī), nigh, [50] For Lists of exceptions, see Section 45.

There is a vicious pronunciation of many words in these terminations commonly heard in the pulpit, particularly amongst young and illiterate ministers, in which the e is not merely sounded when it should be suppressed, but has a degree of distinctness and importance given to it, which apart from conveying the impression of affectation or vulgarity, tends greatly to lessen the force of the other words of the sentences in which they occur. Thus, oven (ŭv'n) is pronounced ŭv'ĕn, happ'en ('n), happ'ĕn, ward'en ('n), war'dĕn, &c.; yet, strange to say, the important word 'heaven' is uniformly given by the same persons according to the prevailing usage of polished speakers, with the e suppressed. This usage of the pulpit defeats its own object—if object it has, and borders on absurdity. See Note 48, &c.

[59] Wind (air in motion), and wind (to blow or ventilate), with their 'formatives' and 'compounds', except occasionally in poetry, have departed from the Rule, and are now always heard with the ĭ short. So of window. Windlass and windle (from the v. to wind) have also I.

thigh, light (līt), night[60], wight; before gn in the same syllable, as in sign, resign', malign'; and before nt in the irregular word pint; also, generally, at the end of the first syllable of words of which the second syllable is accented, and commences with a vowel, as in biog'raphy, diam'eter, prior'ity, tiār'a; or when it forms such an initial syllable by itself, as in iam'bic, Ion'ic, io'ta; sometimes in a like position when the second syllable commences with a consonant, as in gigan'tic, itin'erant, idol'atry, prime'val, viva'cious[61]; and always at the end of Greek and Latin words, as in duum'viri (-rī), tro'phī (entom.), &c.[62]. The i is also generally long and diphthongal in the prepositive syllables bi-, chi-, di-, tri-, &c., when the accent is on the second syllable, whether this begins with a vowel or not, as biax'al, bilob'ular, digam'ma, trien'nial; often so in the final unaccented syllables of words ending in e mute, as fi'nite, ex'pedite, su'icide, con"cubine, &c.; and in several other cases, although in other like combinations to the first of those last mentioned, particularly when the second syllable commences with a consonant, the vowel usually slides into the slender sound of e, and in those referred to in the second, into that of ĭ; but 'the exceptions to each of these are so numerous, that nothing but' a classified list of the words alluded to, 'will give a tolerable idea of the state of pronunciation in this point'. (Walker.)[63]

When i ends an unaccented syllable, or forms one by itself (except in the cases already noticed), it usually drops the first element of the diphthong, and has precisely the sound of the vowel e when occurring in similar positions, as in digest' (de-), direct', divers'ify, ir'ritate (-re-), med'icine (-e-), pimen'to (pe-), sĭli"cia (se-), &c.; and in many cases, particularly in certain penultimate syllables, this sound is further shortened into e 'brief' or 'alphabetic', or into its correspondent 'stopped' sound ĭ, as in assim'ilate (-e-lāte), rat'ify (-e-fī), affin'ity (-ĭt-e or -e-te), im'itate (-e-), flex'ible (-ĭbl), sens'ible, inim'ical (-e-kăl or -ĭk-ăl), crit'ical (-ĭk-), &c.[64]

The i in the frequent vowel-digraph ie, except when it is final in monosyllables, has also nearly always the sound of ē or e; as in chief (chēf), grieve (grēv), thieve, yield, grenadier (-dēr'), rev'erie (-e), &c.[65]

This sound of i is also commonly heard in words borrowed from foreign languages (particularly the Fr., It., and Sp.), and in many words derived from these languages though now partially anglicised, or, in some cases, long since permanently incorporated with our own; as antique (-tēk'), bombasine (-zēn'), caprice (-prēs'), chagrin (-grēn'), critique (-tēk'), fatigue (-tēg'), glacis (-sēs'—mil.), intrigué (-trēg'), invalid (-lēd'), machine (-shēn'), magazine (-zēn'), marine (-rēn'), oblique (-lēk'), pique (pēk), police (-lēs'), pro'file (-fīl), routine (-tēn'), seignior or signor (sēn'-yŭr), tontine (-tēn'), ver'digris and am'bergris (-grēs, as pop. pronounced), and many others.[66]

When the letter i occurs in an unaccented syllable before another vowel, and [61] But more frequently like e. See Section 12.

[62] See Section 99.

[63] Several such Lists are given in Section 45.

The length and sound of the i in the unaccented final syllable of words, depends chiefly on the position of the accent, and the number of syllables; sometimes, on the quantity of the corresponding vowel in the 'primitive'; but the diversity of classes so arising, and their exceptions, are too numerous to admit of more than a few leading ones being noticed in this Introduction.

[64] The exceptions to both the sounds of i referred to in the last two paragraphs are so numerous, as to defy reduction to Rules. Doubtful cases may be best settled by reference to the words themselves, as given in the body of the Dictionary. See Note 63.

[65] Friend and its 'formatives' and 'compounds', sieve, and one or two others, are exceptions. So also is tierce, when pronounced tērse, as marked by Walker and Webster. See Sections 24, 99, &c.

[66] Oblige was formerly also pronounced in the same manner (o-blēj'); a practice now regarded as affected or vulgar.

is preceded by any consonant not a 'dental', and particularly by l, n, or m, this sound of i (i. e., e; v. su.) very frequently, and, in colloquial discourse, nearly always unites with the following vowel or vowel-digraph in utterance, forming a species of y-diphthong; as bil'iary (-yăr-e), bril'iant (-yănt), fil'ial (-y'ăl), măn'ia (-y'ă), măn'iac (-y'ăc), min'ion (-yŭn), pon'iard (-yărd), span'iel (-yĕl), famil'iar (-yăr), ăm'iable (-yăbl‡), abstĕm'ious (-y'ŭs), harmŏn'ious, ignomin'ious, particip'ial (-y'ăl), convi*v'ial*, &c. So also, sometimes, after a 'dental', if preceded by another consonant, as in Christ'ian (-y'ăn), combust'ion (-yŭn), cord'ial (-y'ăl), digest'ion (-yŭn), mixt'ion, quest'ion, &c.; and sometimes colloquially, even after a 'dental' when preceded by a vowel, as in id'iot (-yŭt), &c.[67]

The sound of long i before r, in monosyllables and accented syllables, is similarly lengthened and modified, and, in the latter, coalesces with the following consonant in utterance, in a similar manner to that of the other long vowels; as fire, mire, sire, mīr'y, wīr'y, pīr'ate, pīr'acy, sīr'en, &c.[68]

When long or diphthongal i (ī), or the sound of ɪ, occurs in the same syllable after g hard, k, or c hard, the faint sound, as of e, indicated in our 'notation' by ('), is, of necessity, interposed between them during the separation of the organs in distinct utterance; as in guide (g'īde), guile (g'īle), guise (g'īze), chyle (k'īle), kind (k'īnd), sky (sk'ī), beguile (-g'īle'), disguise (-g'īze'), (and less perceptibly in) cat'echise, &c.; but great care must be taken not to lengthen this sound into a separate e, as ke-īnd, ge-īde, &c., a 'monster of pronunciation heard only on the stage' (Nares), and among affected and illiterate speakers. A similar interposed sound, but one very much fainter, occurs between ch and ɪ, as in child (ch'ɪld), chime (ch'ɪme), &c., of which, however, the slightest exaggeration becomes vulgar and intolerable.[69]

The quantity or sound of i in the unaccented final syllables of words ending in silent e, is subject to much diversity and uncertainty. 'There is', however, 'one rule of very great extent in words of this termination which have the accent on the penultimate syllable, and that is, that the i in the final syllable of these words is short'[70]; as in adamant'ine (-ɪn), amethȳst'ine, depos'ite (-ɪt), hos'tile (-tĭl), res'pite (-pĭt), serv'ile (-ĭl), &c. The chief exceptions are an'ile, ar'chīves, ca'prīne (a.), car'bine, car'line, car'mine, cer'vine, con'fine (s.), con'fine (v., to border upon), con'trite (a.), cor'vine, co'sine, e'dile, em'pire, e'quine, er'rhine, ex'ile fe'line, fēr'ine, fi'nite[71], gen'tile, length'wise (-wīze), like'wise (-wīze),[72] mȳr'rhine o'vile, part'ile, Paul'ine, pis'cine, pis'mire, por'cine, quag'mire, ram'pire, salīne (when acc. on the first syll.), se'nile, su'pine (a.), um'pire, vam'pire, vul'pine (as sometimes heard), and a few others, in all of which the i is long. But when the accent is on the antepenultimate syllable, in words of this termination, the length of the vowel is not so easily ascertained. Indeed, there is then so little regularity in the sound of this letter in the final syllable, that, in a vast number of cases, nothing but a constant reference to analogy, and an acquaintance with polite usage, will enable the speaker to pronounce them with certainty and decision[73].

[67] The reader will recollect that i (as with e) and another vowel, following c, s, or t, are excluded from this coalescence by the Rule. So also, in most cases, it should not be adopted after a long accented syllable ending with r; for what could sound worse than impēr'ial (-yăl for impēr'ial (-e-ăl), inquisītōr'ial (-yăl) for inquisītōr'ial (-e-ăl), or Sibēr'ian (-yăn) for Sibēr'ian (-e-ăn); although these, and many like words, have been so marked by more than one of our later orthoëpists. When judiciously employed, this union of the vowels adds a grace and ease to pronunciation; but when otherwise used, it not merely offends the ear, but is a gross vulgarism. See Section 12.

15. The sound usually called short i (ĭ, ў)[74], and expressed by that letter, or by its duplicate ў, in the words ill, him, pĭt, spĭr'it, lў'ric, mĭr'ror, ĭr'ritate, conspĭr'acy, vĭr'ile, vĭr'ulent, &c., is heard pure whenever the vowel is completely 'stopped' by a final or following consonant, under precisely the same conditions as with ŏ (Section 13), and the other short or stopped vowels.[75]

When this letter (ĭ, ў) occurs before r and another consonant, in a syllable not final, it is precisely equivalent to e in the same position, as in vĭr'gin (vĕr'-), vĭr'tue, mўr'tle (mĕr'-), &c.[76]; so also in monosyllables and final syllables before r followed by another consonant, as in bĭrd (bĕrd), bĭrth (bĕrth), dĭrt (dĕrt), firm (fĕrm), gĭrd (g'ĕrd), shĭrt (shĕrt), skĭrt (skĕrt or sk'ĕrt), whĭrl (hwĕrl), &c.[77]; and before r final in monosyllables, and in unaccented final syllables, as fĭr (fĕr), sĭr (sĕr), stĭr (stĕr), na'dўr (-dĕr), mar'tўr (-tĕr), &c.[78]; in all of which the vowel e might be substituted for i, without producing the slightest difference in the pronunciation.[79]

When short i occurs, without another vowel, in an unaccented syllable before a final consonant or consonants (except r, or of which r is not one), it retains its regular 'short' or 'stopped' sound[80] pure, though slightly lessened in force and distinctness by the absence of accent; as in de'ist (-ĭst), furnish (-nĭsh), rubbish, &c.[81]

16. Long or open o (ō) is heard pure when the vowel ends or forms a syllable with the accent on it, as in mo'tion, po'tent, o'ver, &c.; and when it forms an unaccented syllable by itself, or ends one, either immediately before or after the accent, as in obe'dient, polite', im'potent, pota'to, &c.; also when it forms a monosyllable by itself, or with a silent h, or (except in do, to, who[83]) ends one having no other vowel, as O, oh, go, no, so; and generally, when it occurs in words or syllables ending in silent e, as b*o*ne, home, n*o*te, r*o*ve, al*o*ne, h*o*e, w*o*e, &c.; but not in lose, move, whose, behove (and their compounds), which have the o like o͞o[84]; nor in come, done, dove, love, glove, none, some, shove, sponge, above, and a few others, in which the o has the sound of ŭ; nor in gone, in which it has the sound of ŏ, in worse where it sounds like ŭ(r), in one where it sounds like wŭ, in corse where it is equivalent to a͞w, and several others.

O is also long before ll in knoll, poll, roll, stroll, toll, troll, &c.; before ld in [79] Refer to the Sections relating to the other short vowels; also to Sections 25-26.

[80] That is the 'stopped' sound corresponding to ĕ, as heard in pĭt, pĭt'y; not ē.

[81] 'When this letter is unaccented in the numerous terminations -ible, -ity, &c., it is frequently pronounced like ŭ; but it may be observed that the pure sound of i like e' (i. e., e brief, or ĭ) 'in these words, is as much the mark of an elegant speaker, as that of ŭ in singular, educate, &c.' (Walker.)

[82] Sheridan, and the older orthoëpists generally, notice only three sounds of this letter, as heard in nōte, nŏt, prove (o͞o). Mr Walker adds to these the sounds of o in dove (ŭ), nor (aw), wolf (o͝o), making six. For such of them as are not noticed, or fully noticed, under O, refer to Sections 8, 11, 19, 20-1, &c.

[83] In which the o is sounded o͞o or ō͝o; which sound is carried into their cases and formatives.

[84] Nor in canoe (-no͞o'), and one or two others. Nor in the vowel digraph or improper diphthong æ or oe, which has usually the sound of ē. See Sections 12, 99.

bold, cold, fold, gold, hold, sold, told, wold, &c.; before single l in control, patrol, &c.; before rt in fort, port, sport; before st in ghost, host, most, post; before ss in gross; and before several other groups of consonants, including their formatives and compounds.

The long sound of o is also found under several of its combinations with other vowels; as oa, in boast, hoard, groan; ou, in court, soul, mould; ow, in blow, flow, grown, known, bestow; au and eau in hautbois, hauteur, eau, beau, and other words from the French; and occasionally in several other combinations, both vowel and consonantal.[85]

The sound of long o, before r, is similarly affected and modified to that of the other open vowels; and in accented syllables before r, and accented antepenultimate syllables before any consonant (but c, s, ŏr t), it usually, or very frequently, like them, coalesces with the following consonant in utterance; as in pōr'ous, stōr'y, empōr'ium (-e-ŭm), hyperbōr'ean (-e-ăn), matrimōn'ial, metabōl'ian (-yăn), &c.[86]

The irregular sound of o (= o͞o) in move, prove, &c.[87], is noticed in the first paragraph of this Section. It also occurs in tomb, whom, womb; in the adopted French words poltron, ponton, sponton or esponton, &c., as heard in English mouths; and in a few others.

17. The sound usually called short o (ŏ)[88], and represented by this letter in got, lot, not, op, upon, fŏr'age, ŏr'ifice, stol'id, top'ic, tŏr'rent, authŏr'ity, &c., is that which the vowel generally bears when 'stopped' by a pure consonant, and this under precisely the same conditions as with ŏ (Section 13), and the other short or stopped vowels; but the exceptions are numerous, as will be seen by reference to the paragraphs immediately preceding and following the present one.[89]

When this short sound of o occurs before ss, st, th, or a liquid (except r) followed by a mute, as in cross (krŏs), dross, loss, moss[90], cost, frost, broth, cloth, solve and its compounds absolve, dissolve, resolve, &c., there is a slight tendency to 'broadness', which, when exaggerated or even perceptibly increased, becomes a decided vulgarism. 'The exact sound, in every instance, lies between the one indicated' (by ŏ or ă) 'and the vulgar corruption'.[91] Solve, and its compounds, are 'the only words where a somewhat longer sound of the o is agreeable to polite pronunciation'.[92] This broadness of the o is often, by the illiterate, particularly in the provinces, extended to the vowel before other consonants than those mentioned above, and this to a degree which converts cŏffee into cawffee, ŏff into awf, frŏst into frawst, &c.; a perversity and vulgarity of utterance easily acquired, but, in the adult, usually very difficult to eradicate.[93]

The sound of short o in unaccented syllables, like that of ŏ (Section 13) and the other stopped vowels, is in general regular, though relatively fainter and obscurer than in accented syllables, as concrete', concur'rent, connect'ive, declar'atory, aud'itory, incompress'ible, observe', observa'tion, pollute', pontif'ic, &c.; but with many exceptions, particularly in the initial and final syllables of words not classical [86] Not po'rous, empo'reum, matrimo'nial, &c. See Sections 6, 12, 14, 26, &c.

[87] Called by Walker its 'long, slender sound'.

[88] The short or stopped sound corresponding to 'aw', not to ŏ, as the name implies. It is precisely identical with the a in what (hwŏt). See Sections 2, 11, &c.

[89] Short o, of all the vowels, not even excepting i, is the most irregular and uncertain in its sound, as noticed in the Text. Even the accent is not always sufficient to restrain its tendency to obscureness, or its degeneration into the sound of ŭ.

[90] Gross having the o long, is an exception.

[91] Smart.

[92] Walker.

[93] 'As it would be gross, to a degree, to sound the a in castle, mask, and plant, like the a in psalm, psalm, &c.; so it would be equally exceptionable to pronounce the o in moss, dross, frost, &c., as if they were written mawse, drawse, frawst, &c.' (Walker.)

or technical, and in other cases, in which it has sunk either into the sound of ŭ, or one nearly approaching it, or is altogether suppressed in utterance.[94]

So also of ŏ in the accented syllables of many words in which it is now pronounced like ŭ and its modifications; and in a few others, like o͝o.[94]

Among the exceptions to the usual and proper sound of ŏ, above referred to, are—

O equivalent to ŭ; heard in many words when the vowel is followed and stopped by the 'liquids' m, n, r, and the 'semivowels' v, z, and (sometimes) th and s, both in accented and unaccented syllables, and even in several monosyllables ending in e mute, as in the following list:—accom'pany, accom'paniment; affront', affront'; among', amongst'; atter'ney; bomb, bombard', bombard'ment, bombardier'; bombasin' or bombazine'; bombast', bombast'ic; bor'age (colloq.), bor'ough; broth'er; chocse'monger[95]; coch'ineal (kŭtch'-); col'ander; col'our, col'ouring, col'ourable; com'bat (s., v.; accor. to S., Wa., &c.), com'batant (do.), com'bative (do.); com'ber; come, com'ing, come'ly; com'fit; com'fort (s., v.), com'fortable; com'frey; compan'ion, compan'ionable; com'pany (s., v.); compare', compar'ison; com'pass (s., v.); complain', complaint'; compute'; com'rade (accor. to K., P., Sh., Wa.); con'duit (-dĭt); con'jure, con'juror; con'stable, con'stablery, constab'ulary; cov'enant (s., v.), cov'enanter; cov'er (s., v.), cov'ering, cov'ercle, cov'erlet; cov'ert, cov'erture; cov'et, cov'etous; cov'ey; cov'in, cov'inous; coz'en, coz'enage; discom'fit; discom'fort (s., v.); done (dŭn); don'jon; dost, doth; dove, dove'let, dove'tail; drom'edary; encom'pass; fell'-monger, fish'monger[96]; front (a., s., v.), front'age, front'ed (a.); glove (s., v.), glov'er; gov'ern, gov'ernance, governante', gov'ernor, gov'ernment, &c.; homm'ock; hon'ey, hon'eyed (-id) or hon'ied; hov'er, hov'ering (a.); love (s., v.), love'able, lov'er, love'ly, &c.; Mon'day; mon'etary, mon'ey, mon'eyed (-id) or mon'ied; mong'corn; mon"ger (and its compounds); mon"grel; monk (mŭngk), monk'ey; month, month'ly; moth'er, moth'erly, moth'ery; none (nŭn); noth'ing; once (wŭnse), one (wŭn), one'ness; on'ion; oth'er (and its comp.); ov'en; plov'er; pom'ace, pomegran'ate (accor. to Wa. and We.), pomm'age; pomme or pommette' (her.—Fr.); pomm'el (s., v.); pommĕl'ion (artil.); pom'pet (typ.); pom'pion, pom'pire; poth'er (colloq.); rom'age; rhomb (rŭmb; in navig., not in geom.); scov'el; shove (s., v.); shov'el, shov'eller or shov'elard; slov'en, slov'enly; smoth'er (s., v.), smoth'ery; some, some'body, some'how, some'thing, &c.; som'ersault or som'erset; Som'erset (county of); son; sov'ereign (accor. to K., Na., Wa., We.), sov'ereignty (do.); sponge (s., v.), spon"gy, spon"giole; stom'ach (-ăk; s., v.), stom'achal, stom'achous[96], stom'acher (-cher); thor'ough, thor'oughly, thor'oughfare; ton (a weight), tonn'age; tongue (tŭng; s., v.); won'der, won'derful, won'drous; word (s., v.); work (s., v.), work'er, work'man, &c.; world, world'ling, world'ly; worm, worm'y; wor'nil, wor'ry; worse, worst (a., s., v.); wor'ship, wor'shipful, wor'shipper; wort; worth, wor'thy; and a few others, with their formatives and compounds when they retain the accents of their primitives.[97]

This sound of o (ŭ) also occurs, with a few exceptions, in the unaccented terminations -oc, -ock, -od, -ol, -om, -on[98], -op, -or, -ol, -oth, and -some; as in hav'oc, cass'ock, meth'od, căr'ol, duke'dom, king'dom, ŭn'ion, lock'ron, am'azon (as English), gal'lop, er'ror, tu'tor, car'rot, ri'ot, tur'bot, mam'moth, frol'icsome (-sŭm), glad'some, trou'bl'esome, &c.[99]

[94] Vide the following paragraphs of this Section.
[95] And so of all the other compounds of monger.
[96] But not in stomach'ic (a., s.), stomach'ical, &c.
[97] For the full 'notation' of the words in the above List, refer to the body of the Dictionary.
[98] But after several consonants, the o in this termination, is altogether suppressed. Vide ante, also Section 45, &c.
[99] The chief exceptions are technical terms and proper names from the Greek and Latin, which preserve the o distinct, though slightly obscured by the absence of accent. Author, editor, pal'lor, torpor, and some other words adopted entire from the learned languages, with cassock, epoc, and several others, also do the same in formal discourse, but otherwise follow the general rule.

So of o before m, r, n, and l, in the prepositive syllables com-, cor-, con-, col-, occurring immediately before the accent (principal or secondary), where it loses much of its distinctness, and in many cases colloquially, sinks into a sound more or less approaching that of ŭ, as may be perceived in an unaffected or rapid utterance of combine', command', commune', complaint', composed', compress', commis"-sion, compen'sate, compo'nent, correct', corrode', corrupt', corrup'tion, concrete', concur', connect', conceive', concep'tion, consid'er, concatena'tion, considera'tion, collect', collec'tion, collu'sion, &c.[100]; but this faintness or obscureness, except in the words referred to at page xxxi, does not occur in syllables under the accent (whether primary or secondary), in which the vowel retains its regular stopped sound (ŏ), as heard in com'pact, com'plex, com'press, com'parable, commenda'tion, compliment'al, comprehend', cor'rody, correspond', con"crete, con'sequent, consequen'tial, constella'tion, col'lect, &c.

The o, in the frequent unaccented termination -on, is generally silent or suppressed after c or k, d, l, p, s, t (unless preceded by x[101]), and z; as in beacon (bē'kn), reckon (rĕk'n), par'don (-dn), Bil'ton (-tn), capon (kā'pn), crim'son (-zn), glutt'on (-n), bla'zon (-zn), &c. The chief exceptions occur in words from the learned languages, in which the ŏ, in formal discourse, retains its distinctive character, though somewhat fainter and obscurer by the absence of accent, but colloquially assumes a sound nearly approaching that of ŭ, as in am'azon, diapa'-son, &c.; and in a few other words in which the o, though not suppressed, sinks completely into the sound of ŭ, as in advow'son (-sŭn), compar'ison, hori'zon, u'nison, &c.[102]

O as ā (āw, or)[103]; generally heard when the vowel is followed by r final, or by r and another consonant, as in or (āwr), for, nor, north, adorn' (-dāwrn'), form, for'mer, orch'ard, &c.; but not, in accented syllables, before a final r followed by a vowel, or rr (except in 'formatives'), as fŏr'age, ŏr'ifice, sŏr'ry, tŏr'rid, &c., in which the o, like 'a' and 'e' under the same conditions, as noticed at pages xxii, xxiv, preserves its short sound pure.

O as ŏŏ; a sound exactly corresponding to the u in bull, full, pull, &c., and the oo in wool, with one exception, is heard only in a few words in which the vowel comes between w and l, m, or r; as in bosom (bŏŏz'-), wolf (wŏŏlf), wol'verene, wom'an[104] (wŏŏm'-), wor'sted, and their 'formatives' and 'compounds', and in the proper names Wol'sey, Wolverhamp'ton, Wol'verton, Worcester (wŏŏs'-tĕr), and, perhaps, one or two others.[105]

U.

18. The long diphthongal u (ū, yōō)[106], like the open vowels, is generally heard pure in syllables ending in e mute, and when it is final in an accented syllable, or [100] This obscureness of the vowel is the most marked in the syllable com-, and occurs in the others in a diminishing degree in the order given in the Text. When not marked in the 'notation', this faintness or obscureness must be understood not to pass beyond that common to the unaccented short vowels, or, in reference to the given words, to be either colloquial or vulgar. See Sections 13, 25, &c.

[101] As in sex'ton (-tŭn).

[102] For Lists and Exceptions, see Section 45 (et ante).

[103] Called by Mr Walker the 'long, broad o', and commonly represented in our 'notation' by the simple o before r (or), except in cases where some other word, though similarly spelled is differently pronounced, and then by the phonotype given in the Text, or, when the sound is slightly shortened, by aw; and in each case generally followed by 26, referring to the Section where this sound is explained.

[104] But not in its plural, women (wĭm'-ĕn).

forms an accented syllable by itself, as in *cu*be, *du*e, *tu*ne, cu'bic, mūt'ual, pa'trid, u'nion, u'nit, u'nison, &c.; also when it ends or forms a syllable either immediately before or after the accent, as in *mu*ta'tion, *u*nite', ed'ucate, reg'ular, sin"gular, &c.[107]. The chief exceptions are when u occurs in an open syllable after r, in which case it drops its first element, and is equivalent to ōō, as in *cru*de (krōōde), *ru*de (rōōde), intru'sion (-trōō'-), &c.; and after j or l, and sometimes after s, sounded as zh or sh, when it partially suffers the same loss, retaining only the slight sound of e, indicated in our 'notation' by ('), as in jury (j'ōōr'-e), judi"cial (j'ōō-), lute (l'ōōte), pollution (-l'ōō'-), lēi'sure (-zh'ōōr), sure (sh'ōōr), assur'ance, &c.[108]

When long u occurs before r in the same syllable, or ending an accented syllable is followed by another syllable beginning with r, or (sometimes) with another consonant, it is similarly affected to ā, ē, and the other open vowels, as in cure, fūr'y, pūr'ity, cūr'ative, immūt'able, &c.[109] Before another vowel, in the same syllable, u has generally the sound of w.[110]

U after q is generally silent in words adopted from the French, and with the e (ue) is always so in the terminations -gue and -que; as cheq*ue* (chĕk), cheq'uer (-ėr), *e*tiquette' (-kĕt'), masquerade' (-kėr-), dem'agog*ue* (-gŏg), ep'ilog*ue* (-lŏg), opāq*ue'* (-pāk*e'*), &c.[111]

19. The sound usually called short or stopped u (ŭ)[112], is that which the letter generally bears (with the exceptions noticed below) when it is followed and stopped by a consonant, and that under precisely similar conditions to ĕ (Section 13), and the other short vowels; as in b*u*t, c*u*p, s*u*n, b*u*st, th*u*s, c*u*s'tom, c*u*t'lass, c*u*r'rent, hŭr'ry, &c.

This sound of u (ŭ) is frequently expressed by the letter o, as in c*o*me (kŭm). d*o*ne, s*o*n, and many other words noticed in Section 17.

U, equivalent to ŏŏ[113], a sound of the vowel chiefly confined to words beginning with one of the 'mute labials' b, p, or the 'labio-dental' semivowel f, and which end with the 'liquid' l, or the 'dentals' s, sh, t, and d, as heard in the words contained in the following List, which embraces almost all those in the language in which u has this sound:—b*u*ll (bŏŏl), b*u*ll'ace, b*u*ll'ary (a collec. of papal b*u*lls), b*u*l'chin, b*u*ll'etin, b*u*ll'et, b*u*ll'ion, b*u*ll'ock, b*u*ll'y, b*u*l'wark, b*u*sh (s., v.), [107] There is a strong tendency to change the sound of ū after d, t, l, n, and s, into ōō, even when it is under the accent, as in dū'ty, tū'tor, lū'cid, enū'merate, insū'perable, &c., which careless and illiterate speakers pronounce doo'ty, too'tor, &c.; but in avoiding this error, the u must not be broken up into e-oo, as is often done by affected speakers, who pronounce these words as if spelled dĕ-ū'ty, tĕ-ū'tor, &c.

An equally vicious error prevails with u, when ending or forming an unaccented syllable, in giving it an obscure sound resembling that of e, ĕ, or ŭ. Thus, singular, regular, particular, &c., are often corrupted into sing-e-lar, reg-u(r)-lar, &c.; but 'nothing tends more to tarnish and vulgarise the pronunciation than this short and obscure sound of the unaccented u'. (Walker.)

The sound of u in bury (bĕr'-re), burial (bĕr'-e-al), busy (bĭz'-e), business (bĭz'-nĕs), and their other derivatives and 'formatives', is a wanton corruption, which nothing but long usage can now justify. See Note 108.

[108] The sound of u after j, l, r, &c., here noticed, is that now given to it by all polite speakers. It has the authority of Mr Walker and of all our latest orthoëpists, including Mr Smart, who adopts this 'notation' of the vowel in his Dictionary.

[109] See Sections 6, 12, 14, &c.

[110] See Sections 24, 45.

[111] See Sections 45, 99.

[112] This is the 'stopped' sound corresponding to ō, or the one most nearly allied to it, and bears no relation to ū except in form and name. See Section 2.

It may here be useful to mention, that 'the letter u is never subject to the shortening power of either the primary or secondary accent; but, when accented, is always long, unless shortened by a double (doubled) consonant' (Walker); or, it may be added, by two successive consonants.

[113] Mr Walker calls this 'the middle or obtuse u'. See Section 21.

bush'el, bush'y, butch'er, butch'ery, cuck'oo, cush'ion, full (a., ad., s., v.; and when final in compounds, though with only one l), fulfil', full'age, full'er (s.), full'ery, full'ing (a.), Ful'ham (Middlesex), Ful'ton (a proper name), hussar' (hŏŏs-zär'), huzza' (-zä*h*'), pudd'ing, pull (s., v.), pull'en, pull'et, pull'ey, pul'pit, push, puss, put (v.), put (s.; a forced action)[114], putt'ing (an anc. game), sug'ar (shŏŏg'-), and two or three others; with their 'formatives' and 'compounds'[115]. To these may be added a few words from foreign languages, particularly proper names, as Buddh'a (bŏŏd'-ă), Buddh'ism, Buddh'ist, buf'fo, bul'bul, Bulgär'ia, Ful'da, puce'ron (as a Fr. word in English mouths), Punjaub', &c.[116]

This sound of u, except in full, fuller, fulling, &c. (from fullo, L.), does not extend to words from the learned languages, which preserve the usual sound of ŭ, as in ebŭlli'tion, fŭl'minate, repŭl'sion, sep'ŭlchre, sepŭl'chral, &c. So also of the pure English words bŭlge, bŭss, bŭs'tard, bŭs'tle (bŭs'l), bŭss'ard, cŭs'tard, fŭl'some, hŭll, and two or three others, in which the u continues uncorrupted, notwithstanding their form resembles that of some of the words included in the List given above.

The sound of ŭ in unaccented syllables, particularly final ones before r, suffers in loudness and distinctness, like the other short vowels; and, like them, is similarly lengthened and united with r final in utterance; and in 'formatives' ending with r, this occurs even when the r is doubled; as in cur, fur, curl, cur'lew, curr'ish, furr'y, &c.[117]

OO.

20. The long sound (o͞o) expressed by the vowel-digraph oo in boon, booth, boo'ty, coo, food, fool, moon, rood, soon, stool, woo, platoon', &c., is a simple vowel, notwithstanding the double character by which it is usually and conveniently represented[118]. In some words, as move, prove, tomb, who, whose, &c., it is expressed by a single o[119]; in others, and particularly in words from the French, by ou, as in croup, group, soup, wound, youth, cartouch' (-to͞osh), gout (go͞o; taste), ragout, ren'dezvous (-vo͞o), rouge (ro͞ozhe), tour'maline, &c.;[120] and after r, by u or ui, as in crude (kro͞ode), rude, fruit, recruit, &c.[121]

This sound is similarly affected by r to the other long vowels, as in moor, poor, rür'al (ro͝or'-), &c.

21. The short or stopped sound (o͝o)[122], corresponding to the preceding long one, is represented by the vowel-digraph oo in foot (fo͝ot), good, hood, soot, stood and its compounds, wood, wool, and perhaps one or two others; by u in bull, full, pull, and the other words enumerated in Section 19; and by both ou and u in the popular English pronunciation of many French words, as coutil', tulle, &c.[123]

[114] But not in pĕt, a game at cards.

[115] This List might, perhaps, be extended by the addition of a few provincial words. 'Some speakers give bulk and punish this obtuse sound of u, but luckily have not been followed'. (Walker.)

Y.

OI, OY.

22. The sound expressed by the vowel-combinations oi and oy (oi, oy) is a pure diphthong[122], as heard in oil, boil, toil, an*oint'*, app*oint'*, boy, emp*loy'*, and all other English words in which these letters come together in the same syllable. The exceptions to this sound of the vowel-digraph oi, occur chiefly in a few words from the French.[123]

OU, OW.

23. The sound represented in the 'notation' of this Dictionary by ou and ow (ou, ow)[124], is the proper diphthong heard in about, noun, found, round, house, hour, compound', brow, cow, how, bower, flower, fowl, frown, town, &c., and is the usual and regular power of these letters when they occur together in the same syllable. In some words, however, ou has the sound of ŭ; in others, that of ŏ or o͞o; and, in a few, that of o͝o, ŏ, or ŏo͞[125]. So also of ow, which, instead of its regular sound, has frequently that of ō, a sound which it always bears in the final unaccented syllables of words, as in bil'low, fel'low, mel'low, wil'low, bor'row, sor'row, &c.[126]

24. The term Alphabetic Vowels is explained in Section 3 (p. xv). In the 'notation' of this Dictionary they are expressed by the simple vowels, without any mark of accent or quantity, as a, e, i, o, u; w is equivalent to initial oo; and y to i, or when initial, to e.

The Vowels, both long and alphabetic, and sometimes even when short or stopped, occur under other modes of spelling, or as vowel-digraphs, of which one of the letters is usually silent, though effective in lengthening, modifying, or indicating the sound of the other; as ā, by ai or ay, as in bail, say, &c.; ē or e, by ee, ea, ey, æ in sweet, meat, galley, minuti*æ*; ĕ, by ea or ie, as in sweat, friend, &c.; and so of the other vowels, as noticed under each, and in the Tables given below and in Section 45.

The nature of the compound vowels called 'Diphthongs' is explained in Sections 2, 4; and the principal ones are enumerated and analysed in Section 2, and its Notes. The powers, &c., of I, ū, oi or oy, and ou or ow, are also separately noticed in Sections 14, 18, 22-3, 41-3; and these, with others, are again referred to, and Lists of exceptions to their more usual or regular sounds are given in the Table below, and in Section 45.

The powers of the usual vowel-digraphs or 'Improper diphthongs', as well as [122] On its nature, &c., see Sections 2, 3.

[123] For Lists of words, &c., see Sections 24, 45, 99. The vulgar often change this sound into that of I; as bile for boil, tile for toil, &c.

[124] See Sections 2, 3, &c.

[125] For Lists of the principal words in which these irregular sounds occur, see Sections 24, 45.

[126] The vulgar commonly shorten this sound, and pronounce the o obscurely; and not unfrequently, even pervert it into er, and say fel'ler for fell*ō*w, wind'er for wind*ō*w, &c. Good speakers, as observed by Mr Walker, always give the ow in this position the full sound of open o(ō).

of a few vowel-trigraphs commonly called 'Triphthongs', are exhibited in the following Tables[127]:—

Ae, æ = ē, in words from the classical languages, when occurring either under the accent, or (with a few exceptions) immediately before it, as in æ'olian, æol'ic, æru'go, æsthet'ic (ēs-), æ'ther, Æ'thiop's (mineral), aphær'esis (-fēr*e*'-), fæ'ces, fæ'cal, pæ'an, tæ'dium, tæ'nia, &c.; and in Latin genitives and plurals having this termination, as ro'sæ (of a rose), vi'tæ (of life), antenn'æ (pl.), cornuco'piæ (pl.), exu'viæ, lam'inæ, minu'tiæ, stri'æ, &c.[128]

ae, æ = ĕ, in diær'esis (-ĕr'-), Mi'chael (-kĕl), Mich'aelmas (mĭk'-ĕl-), &c.; and when shortened by the secondary accent, as in pædobap'tist (accor. to S. and Wa.), *Æ*nobar'bus (ĕn-), &c.; and in certain classical proper names when under the accent, as *Æ*ch'nus (ĕk'-), Dæd'alus, Dæm'ones, &c.

ae = ā, in tael, faer'y (obs. orthog. of fairy), &c.

Ai = ā, as in paid, plain, avail', &c. The exceptions are few:—

ai = ă, in plaid (plăd), rāill'ery, Brit'ain[129], plāis'ter (obs. orthog. of plaster), and perhaps two or three others.

ai = ĕ, again (-gĕn'), against', said[130], afore'said, saith.

ai = ī, in aisle (īle).

ai = ĭ, as in cur'tain, vill'ain (exc. in formal discourse), and a few other words of frequent occurrence, as heard colloquially.[131]

Ao = ā, in the single word gaol (jāle), and its compounds.

Au = ā (āw), as in fault, caught (kāwt), sauce, taught, daugh'ter (dāw'-), &c. The chief exceptions are—au = ă (ăh), as in aunt, launch, jaun'dice, laun'dress, saun'ter, and nearly all other words in which au precedes n followed by another consonant, except vaunt, avaunt', maun'dril, and Maun'dy (-thursday), in which it is regular; also in draught (drāft), laugh (lāf), laugh'ter, &c.

au = ā, in gauge (s., v.).

au = ŏ, in caul'iflower, laur'el (lŏr'-), laud'anum.

[127] It should be observed, that the sounds given in the Tables, refer only to the vowels when occurring together in the same syllable; and not when they follow each other in separate syllables.

When one of the vowels of an improper diphthong or triphthong is marked with the long or short quantity (- or ŭ), it is that one which alone is sounded; the other, or others, being silent. 'Skeleton' letters are always silent, though generally significant or effective with reference to the letter or letters which precede them.

To avoid unnecessary repetition, it may be as well to state here, that many of the vowel-combinations which follow, are also noticed in the preceding Sections; and again, in their combinations with consonants, in Sections 45, 99; also that the pronunciation of the 'primitives' are, with a few exceptions, carried into their 'common formatives' and 'compounds'. For the full 'notation', &c., of the words given as examples, refer to the body of the Dictionary.

[128] In many words of frequent occurrence, as æ'ther, *æ*qua'tor, æ'quinox, &c., the æ of the Romans has been changed to simple e, which, however, usually follows the diphthong in quantity, but with greater licence and more numerous exceptions, in which it is more frequently liable to be shortened by the secondary accent. In proper names, as Æne'as, Æ'sop, Cæ'sar, &c., the æ is always preserved by correct writers, although the contrary course was recommended by Dr Johnson. In a'er (air, L.), and its derivatives aēr'ial, a'ēriform, a'ëronaut, &c., the ae form separate syllables, and do not fall under the rule. The same applies to the word Is'raël, which is properly pronounced in three syllables, though often heard in two; and so of many other words.

[129] Colloquially, brĭt'n, and so marked by Dr Thomas, in Baldwin's 'Universal Pronouncing Gazetteer'.

[130] When an adjective and emphatic, some speakers give the ai a sound between that of ĕ and ă. Mr Walker says, 'When this word is an adjective, as the "said man", it is regular, and rhymes with trade'.

[131] Knowles and Walker mark the ai as ĭ in captain, fountain, mountain, and all, or nearly all, other words of this termination; a pronunciation now avoided by polite speakers, as vulgar.

au = ō, in French words, and in many words derived from the French, as hauteur (hō-tārʹ), hautboy (hōʹ-boy; from hautbois, Fr.), &c.

Aw = ā (ăw), as in bawl, brawn, saw, &c. It is always regular.

Awe = ā (ăw), as in awe.

Ay = ā, as in day, play, say, delayʹ, &c. When unaccented and final, as in Sunʹday, Monʹday, &c., it sinks into the sound of the feeble alphabetic a (ə).[122]

ay = ĕ e (ĕlʹ-e), heard in the colloquial adverb ay (yes).[123] ay = ō, in quay. See uay.

Aye = ā (āe), in aye (poet., always, ever).

Ea = ē, as in beat, crease, east, fear, mean, wreak, appear, beaver, easy, creature, &c. The chief exceptions, in the order of their frequency, are—ea = ĕ, in abrĕast, ahĕad, alrĕady, bedstĕad, behĕad, besprĕad, bestĕad, brĕad, brĕadth, brĕakfast, brĕast, brĕath, clĕanse, clĕanly (a.), dĕad, dĕadly, dĕaf, dĕafen, dĕarth, dĕath, ĕarl, ĕarldom, ĕarly, ĕarn, ĕarnest, ĕarth, ĕarthen, ĕarthly, ĕat (prt.), endĕavour, fĕarful (terrible—thea.), fĕather, hĕad, hĕadstrong, hĕady, hĕalth, hĕard (prt., pp.), hĕarse, hĕaven, hĕavy, instĕad, jĕalous, lĕad (a metal), lĕaden, lĕant (colloq. prt. and pp. of to 'lean'), lĕarn, lĕarning, lĕather, lĕaven, lĕavened (a., pp.), lĕaped (lĕpt; prt., pp. of to 'leap', as heard colloq.), mĕadow, mĕant (prt., pp., of to 'mean'), mĕasure, pagĕant and pagĕantry (as often heard; v. i.), pĕarl, pĕasant, phĕasant, plĕasant, plĕasantry, plĕasure, rĕad (prt., pp., of to 'read'), rĕady, rĕalm, rehĕarse, rehĕarsal, reaĕarch, sĕamstress (for 'semptress'), sĕarce, sĕarch, sergĕant, serjĕant, sprĕad, stĕad, stĕadfast, stĕady, stĕalth, stĕalthy, swĕat, swĕaty, thrĕad, thrĕat, thrĕaten, trĕachery, trĕad, trĕadle, trĕasure, vengĕance, wĕalth, wĕalthy, wĕapon, wĕather, yĕarn, zĕalot, zĕalous, and a few others, with their 'formatives' and 'compounds'.

ea = ā, in beăr, breăk, greăt, peăr, steăk, sweăr, teăr (v.), teăr (a rent), weăr (s., v.)[124], and a very few others.

ea = ä (ăh), in hearken (härkʹn), heart, hearten, hearty, hearth.

ea = ā, in pageănt (pājʹ-ānt) and pageăntry (v. su.).

ea = yʹĕ or ʹā, as in malleable, &c.[125]

Eau = ō or o, in words from the French, as eau (ō; water), beau, bureauʹ, flamʹbeau (-bo), portmanʹteau (-to), &c.

eau = ō, in bureaucracy (-rŏkʹ-; as heard colloq.).

eau = ū, in beaŭty, beaŭteous, &c.

Ee = ē, as in flee, meet, proceed, &c.

ee = ĭ, in breeches (a garment), and to breech.[126] ee = ā, in the poetical contractions eʹer (āre) and neʹer (nāre).

Ei = ā, the general sound of this digraph, as heard in deign (dāne), feign, freight, heir, neigh, their, weight, eight, heinous, inveigh, neighbour, obeisance, &c.

ei = ē, as in cĕil, cĕiling, concĕit, concĕive, decĕit, decĕive, ĕither[127], invĕigle, lĕisure, nĕither[127], plebĕian (as often heard colloq.)[127], recĕive, sĕigneurial, sĕignior, sĕigniory, sĕine, sĕize, sĕizin, sĕizure, wĕir, wĕird, and a few others.

[122] A too distinct pronunciation of the ay in these words, is provincial or vulgar. It should, however, always preserve its open sound pure, and never be changed into -dy (de), as directed by Walker.

[123] The vulgar and rustic pronunciation of the a in this word is ăw. But this sound of the a is not exclusively confined to the vulgar. 'In the House of Commons, when this word is made a noun, we frequently, but not correctly, hear it so pronounced in the phrase "the ayes (oyes) have it"'. (Walker.)

[124] But not in wĕar, a weir.

[125] See Sections 12, 45, &c.

[126] The only words in which ee is reduced to ĭ. Bĕëlzebub (bĕlʹ-, for be-ēlʹ-), is a vulgarism.

[127] Refer to these words in the Dictionary.

ei = ĕ, in hĕifer and nonparĕil.
ei = ī, in heīght (hīte), sleīght; also when it forms a diphthong in classical words[138].
ei = ɪ, heard in unaccented syllables, particularly final ones, as coun'terfeĭt (-fɪt), for'eĭgn (-ɪn), foreĭgner, for'feĭt, for'feĭture, sov'ereĭgn, sur'feĭt, and a few others.
Eo = ĕ, as in lĕoff (lĕf), lĕoffee', lĕoff'or, lĕof'ment, jĕof'ail, jĕop'ard, jĕopardise, jĕopardy, lĕop'ard, and two or three others.
eo = ē, in pēople.
eo = ū, in fēod, feod'al, feod'atory, &c.[139]
eo = ū, or (sometimes) 'ū, when occurring after ch, dg, g soft, or j, in final unaccented syllables, as blud"geon, curmudgeon, dudgeon, dungeon, escutcheon, gudgeon, hab'ergeon, luncheon, pigeon, puncheon, scutcheon, surgeon, truncheon, widgeon, &c. eo = ŏ, in yeŏman, yeŏmanry.[137] eo = ā (āw, or), in George (jorj), georgic[137], Georgium-sidus (ast.).[140]
Eous = e-ŭs, in the unaccented termination -eous, when distinctly or formally uttered, as boun'teous (-te-ŭs), hid'eous, plen'teous, vit'reous, &c.; but more commonly, and always colloquially, contracted into -y'ŭs, -yŭs, or -'ŭs, as in cutān'eous (-y'us), gorgeous (-yŭs), court'eous, nau'seous (-sh'ŭs), outrage'ous (-'ŭs), &c., as noticed in Section 12.
Eu = ū, as in fēūd, dēūce, &c.
Ew = ū, as in dew, few, new, yew, ew'er, &c.; changing after r into o͞o, as in crew (kro͞o), drew; and after j, l, and ch, into 'o͞o, as in Jew (j'o͞o), jew'el, lewd (l'o͞od), chew (ch'o͞o), &c.; just as u does when it is similarly situated. The exceptions are—ew = ō, in (to) sew (with a needle), sewster, shew (v., s.), strew (v.; accor. to Jo. and Wa.), Shrewsbury (shrōze'-; a town), and sewer (shōre; as heard among the vulgar)[137].
ew = o͞o, in sew (to drain), sewage, sewer (an underground drain), sewerage.[141]
Ewe = ū, in ewe.[142]
Ey = ā, as in bey, dey, eyre, grey, prey, they, whey, obey', survey', and all other monosyllables and accented syllables in which it occurs, except key (kē), ley (lē; for lea), and ley (lī; for lye). It also sounds as ā, or rather a, in sur'vey (s.), though not under the accent.
ey = ē or e, as in al'ley, bar'ley, gal'ley, val'ley, and other unaccented syllables, with the single exception just noticed.
Eye = ɪ, in eye (the organ of sight).
Ia = y'ă, yă, or 'ă, when it occurs after the accent, under the conditions noticed in Section 14.
ia = ɪ, in the unaccented termination -iage; as car'rĭage, mar'rĭage, &c. ia = e, in par'liament (-le-mĕnt).
Ie = ē, the usual sound of this digraph in monosyllables and accented syllables when followed by a consonant, as chief (chēf), field, fiend, frieze, grief, grieve, lief, liege, thieve, tierce, &c. It has also this sound (in English mouths), when accented, at the end of words adopted from the French, as in coterie (-ē'); but when unaccented, that of brief or alphabetic e, as in mar'quetrie (-re), rev'erie, &c.

[138] See Section 99.
[139] Now generally written feud, feudal, &c.
[140] In geŏg'raphy, geol'ogy, geom'etry, geora'ma, &c., the e and o occur in separate syllables. So also of eo in gal'leon (-e-ŭn).
[141] But not in sewel, sewer (an officer), sewitude, &c., in which ew is regular. In ew'er the ew and e form separate syllables. See Ew.
[142] Vulgarly and provincially yō.

ie = ĭ, in fri'ĭnd and its 'formatives', and ti'ĭroe and ti'ĭrcel (accor. to Wa. and We.); also in the unaccented termination -ier, as bra'zĭĕr (-zh'ĕr), gla'zĭĕr, gra'mĭĕr, &c.

ie = ī, when final in monosyllables, as hie (hī), lie, tie, vie; and in the plurals of all substantives, and the third persons singular and past participles of all verbs in which ie or y final has the sound of ī, as fly, flies (flīze), lie, lies, deny', denies', denied', dig'nify, dig'nified, &c.

ie = ĭ, as in dignities (-tĭz), excellencies, sullies, sullied, and all other words in which y final, sounded as e, makes -ies or -ied by inflection.

ie = yŭ, in spar'ied, and a few other words in which it follows the accent.

ieu = ū, as in adieu' (-deū'); shortened, like ū, after l into 'ōō, as in lieu (l'ōō), pur'lieu, &c.

iew = ū, in view.

io = ŭ, in the frequent terminations -sion, -zion, and -tion (unless preceded by s), as in le'sion (-zhŭn), mission (mĭsh'-ŭn), pōr'tion (-shŭn), &c.; also after sh in cush'ion, and after ch in mar'chioness. Between g, and n final, it is usually softened into 'ŭ, as in religion (-lĭj'-'ŭn), &c.[143] io = yŭ, in the frequent termination -ion, when not preceded by s or x, or by t (unless it follows s), as in bill'ion (-yŭn), min'ion, digest'ion, &c. The chief exceptions occur in formal discourse, where -ion follows liquid r, or a 'labial' preceded by another labial or a liquid, in which case the i assumes the sound of brief or alphabetic e, forming a short syllable by itself, as in cham'pion (-pe-ŭn), scor'pion, clăr'ion (-e-ŭn), &c.; but even here the two vowels are commonly heard colloquially, in one syllable, as first noticed.

ieu = y'ŭ or yŭ, when occurring after any consonant but c soft, s, or t, under the circumstances noticed in Section 14, as in abstĕm'ious (-y'ŭs), bil'ious (-yŭs), &c.; but here, when it comes after a long or open antepenultimate syllable, and particularly after r, the vowels are usually pronounced separately in formal discourse, as co'pious (-pe-ŭs), ingĕn'ious (-e-ŭs), te'dious (-de-ŭs), vĭăr'ious (-e-ŭs), &c.

ieu = 'ŭ, when following c soft, s, t, or x, as in fac'tious (-ah'ŭs), precious (prĕsh'-'ŭs), noxious (nŏk'-sh'ŭs), &c.

Oa = ō, as in bŏat, cŏal, lōaf, *ōat'*meal, &c. The chief or only exceptions are—oa = ā (āw), in broad (brāwd) and its 'formatives', groat (grāwt), and groats.

Oe = ō, when final in words and syllables, as tŏe, hoe, throe, woe, woe'ful, &c.; and in the plurals of substantives and the inflections of verbs ending in o or es changing to -oes, as foe, fŏes (fōze), potato, potatŏes, forego, foregŏes, &c.; but not in canoe' and shoe, in which oe sounds as ōō; nor in (he) does (dŭz), in which it has the sound of ŭ.

o. e = ĕ, or (sometimes) ĭ, and subject to the same laws as single e (now often substituted for it) in words from the learned languages; as in fœ'tus, hemorp'athy, œsoph'agus, fœt'id, &c.[144]

Oi, oi, occurs in oeil (oye), and several other French words, in which its sound approaches that of ea French; also in the obsolete word oil'iad (e-ll'-yăd—Wa.; from oeillade, Fr.), in which the vowels are diversely marked by orthoepists as forming either two syllables or one[145].

Oeu, œu, occurs in the adopted French word manœuvre (-nōōv'r, s, v.; thus as English), and with a somewhat different pronunciation in many pure French words, as oeuf (an egg), œuvre (work), chef-d'œuvre, &c.[145]

Oi = oi, oy, a pure diphthong heard in boil, toil, point, &c., and noticed in Sections 2, 22. The chief exceptions are avoirdupois (ăv-ĕr-du-poiz'), [143] See Sections 35-6, 45.

choir (kwīr), tor'toise (-tĭz); and generally in unanglicised French words, as abat*toir* (-wor'), chamois (shăm-wä'; colloq., shăm'-e), connoisseur (-ĭs-sĕr'), devoir (dĕv-wor'), turquoise (-kwäwz'), Vaudois (vo'-dä), &c.[146]

Oo = o͞o, the regular sound of this digraph, being the pure long vowel noticed in Section 20. The chief exceptions are—oo = o͝o, the short or stopped sound of this digraph noticed, with examples, in Section 21.

oo = ō, in door (dōre) and floor.

oo = ŭ, in blood (blŭd) and flood.

Ou = ou or ow, the proper and more usual sound of this vowel-digraph, being the pure diphthong described in Sections 2, 23. The exceptions, however, are numerous, and follow below nearly in the order of their frequency in English words:—

ou = ŭ, in adjournn (-jŭrn), chough (chŭf), clough (clŭf), cousin'try, couple, cour'age, cour'teous (as often heard), cour'tesan, cour'tesy (politeness), courte'sy (act of salutation), cous'in (kŭz'n), double, enough (-nŭf'), flour'ish, gour'net, housewife (hŭz'-ĭf; a needle-case), jour'nal, jour'nalise, journey, joust, mounch, nour'ish, nour'iture, nours'le, rough (rŭf), scourge, slough (slŭf; a cast skin)[147], sough (sŭf), south'erly, south'ern, south'ward, south'ron (and other compounds of south, as heard colloq.), touch, tough (tŭf), tour'n, tour'nament, tour'ney, tour'niquet, trouble, trouble'lesome, young, young'ster, and a few others; also in the unaccented syllables of English words, and in anglicised foreign words generally (except 'compounds' which retain the sound of the 'primary'[148]), as so'journ, so'journer, bourgeoise (-joyz'); and in every termination in -our and -ous, as fa'vour, hon'our, o'dour, fa'mous, grie'v'ous, on'erous, &c.

ou = o͞o or oo, heard in a few pure English words, but chiefly in words derived from the French, and in French words[149] generally; as accoucheur' (-shĕr'), accouch'ment, accou'tre, aggroup', amour', bijou' (-zho͞'), bijoute'rie, billet-doux' (-do͞'), blouse, boudoir' (-dwor'), bou'gie (-zhe), bouquet' (-kā'), bourse, bouse (bo͞oz), bous'y, cartouch', contour', coupee', cou'pon, coutil (-tēle', colloq.), croup, douceur (-sŭr'), douche (do͞oshe), fou'mart, gouge, Gouland', gour'mand, gout (go͞; taste, relish), Lou'is (lo͞'-e), lou'ver, Louv're, moustache', ou'sel (o͞'zl), par'amour, pouchong' (-shŏng'), poudrette', ragout' (-go͞'), ren'dezvous (-de-vo͞), rouge (ro͞ozhe), rou'ble, rouś (ro͞'-ä), roulean' (-lō'), roulette', roup, route, routine' (-tēne'), sou, souchong' (-shŏng'), soujee', sous (so͞), souve'nance, souve'nir (-nēre), spoul, stoup, surtout', through (thro͞), tour, tour'maline, tournure', tous (to͞), tout (as a flute or horn), trou'badour, trousseau' (-so'), uncouth', wound (s., v.; a hurt, to hurt, &c.), you, your, youth, youth'ful, &c.

ou = ō, in although' (-thō'), bor'ough (bŭr'-ro), bŏul'der, bŏurne, cŏul'ter, con''-cŏurse, cŏurse, cŏurs'er, cŏurs'ing, cŏurt, cŏurt'eous, cŏurt'ier, cŏurt'ly, cŏurt'ship, discŏurse' (s., v.), dough (dō), dough'y, four, fŏur'teen, fourth, fur'lough (-lō), gourd, in'tercŏurse, mould, mould'y, mould'er, mould, mŏult'ing, mould'warp, mourn, mourne, poult, poul'terer, poul'tice (-tĭs), poul'try, pour, recourse', resource', shoul'der, smoul'der, soul, source, though (thō), thor'ough (thŭr'-ro), trou'l, and a few others.

ou = ä (äw), in besought' (-säwt'), bought (bäwt), brought, fought, nought, ought, sought, thought, wrought (räwt), and one or two others.

ou = o͝o, in could (ko͝od), should, would.

[146] Turkois' (for turquoise), and advoit' and its 'formatives', are regular. See the words given in the Text, in the Dictionary; also see Section 99.

[147] But not in slough (slou or slow), a miry place, in which the digraph is regular.

[148] As pro'noun, ad'noun, &c.

[149] In English mouths.

ou. = ŏ, in enough (ĭnŭf'), lough (lŏk), shough (shŏk), trough (trŏf).

Ow = ou or ow, the regular and more usual sound of this vowel-digraph, being the pure diphthong noticed in Sections 2, 23. The chief exceptions are—ow = ŏ, in below' (-lō'), bestów', blów, bów (something curved), bów'ie (-knife), bówl (s., v.), bów'line, bów'sprit, crów, flów, flówn, frów'er, glów, grów, grówn, grówth, jówl, knów (nŏ), knówn, lów (not high), lów'er (to bring low), lów'land, lów'ly. mów (to cut grass), nów'el, óvoe, óvvn, óvvn'er, óv'elty (?), prów (of a ship; accor. to K., S., Sh.), prówl (accor. to K., Na., P.), rów (a line of persons or things), rów (v.; as a boat), rów'lock, rów'an, Rów'land, shów, slów, slów'ly, snów, Snów'den, sów (v., as seed), sówn, strów, strówn, thrów, thrówn, tów, tów'age, tów'ard (ad., pr.), tów'ards (do.), trów (int.), trówl, and a few others; also in the final unaccented syllables of words, as bil'lów, fel'lów, sor'rów, wil'lów, win'dów, &c. ow = ŏ, in knówl'edge (nŏl'-ĕj), acknówl'edge, and acknówl'edgment[150].

oo = o͞o, in the obsolete or provincial words flowk and nowes (no͞oze), and the heraldic word now'ed.

Oy = oi or oy, the diphthong noticed in Sections 2, 22. It is always regular in English words.

U'a = wä, as in an'tiquāted, assuage', guā'iacum, lang"uage, persuāde', &c.[151]

ua = wä, in e'quāl.[151]

ua = ă, ă, or ä, in guard (g'ărd), guard'ian, guarantee', piq'uant (-änt), and one or two others.

ua = ŭ-a, in act'ŭal, mūt'ŭal, Man'tŭa, residŭary, and other words of a similar construction in which it occurs after the accent, and the vowels form separate syllables. They are silent in quay (kē; v. i.), vict'ual (vĭt'l), vict'uals (vĭt'lz), vict'ualler, vict'ualling, &c. In man'tua-maker, as heard colloq., the a is usually sunk, and the u sounded as brief oo or o͝o.

Uay = ā, in quay (kē; v. su.).

Ue = wē or we, as in con'suetude (-swe-), des'uetude (-we-), que'ry (kwē'), que'rist, &c.[151]

ue = wĕ, in bau"quĕt (băngk'-wĕt), quĕll (kwĕl), quĕnch, quern, quĕr'ulous, quĕst, quĕst'ion, quĕst'or, con"quest[152], requĕst', &c.[151] ue = ŭ, when final in a word or syllable, and subject to like changes after j, l, and r, to that letter, as noticed in Section 18.

ue = ĕ, in guess (gĕs), guĕst, guĕr'don, and a few others, where 'the u is silent, and merely acts as a servile, to preserve the g hard'. (Walker.)

ue is silent in the terminations -gue and -que, as in cat'alogue (-lŏg), antique' (-tēk'), &c.

Uey forms two syllables in glue'y, &c.

Ui = wĭ, as in an"guish (ăng'-gwĭsh), col'loquist, cuĭsh, cuĭsse, distin"guish, extin"guish, guin'iad, lan"guid, lan"guish, lin"guist, pen'guin, quĭbb'le, quick, quill, quilt, quĭnce, quin'sey, quin'tal, quintess'ence, quip, quĭt, quiver, quiz, relin"quish, van"quish, and many others of like formation.[153]

ui = we, in cuisine (kwe-rēn'), cuirassier', cuisine (-zēne'), pur'suivant (-swe-), and many other unanglicised French words.[151]

[150] The pronouncing of the first syllable of these words as it is heard in the verb to know (nō), is now almost wholly confined to a small minority of the clergy, and a few pedagogues and pretenders to classical learning, who mistake over-distinctness of articulation for impressiveness and elegance. 'The Senate and the Stage hold out inflexibly against it; and the nation at large continue to pronounce, as in the old ludicrous lines—

> 'Among the mighty men of knŏwledge,
> That are professors at Gresham college'. (Walker.)

[151] In these cases ua, ue, ui, uo, &c., form proper diphthongs, as noticed in Section 2.

[152] Conquer is now always pronounced kŏng'-kĕr, though marked -kwĕr by Mr Knowles. However, 'analogy undoubtedly demands cŏngk'-wĕr'. (Walker.)

ui = ĭ, in beguĭle (-g'ĭl'), disguĭse, guĭde, guĭd'ance, guĭ'don, guĭle, guĭse, &c., i which the u is merely 'servile', keeping the g hard.

ui = ĭ, as in buĭld (bĭld), buĭld'er, buĭld'ing, buĭlt, bis'cuĭt, cir'cuĭt, con'du (kŭn'-dĭt), guĭld, guĭld'er, guĭld'hall, guĭl'lemot, guĭl'levat, guĭlloch (-lŏshĕ'), guĭlloched' (-lŏsht'), guĭll'otine, guĭlt, guĭlt'y, guĭn'ea, guĭta (ge- or gĭt-), and a few others, in all of which, where u occurs after or c, its office is merely to shew that these letters have their hard sound.

ui = ū, and subject to the same changes as that letter after j, l, and r; as bruise (brōōz), bruĭt (brōōt), cruise (krōōz), fruĭt[153], juice (j'ōōs), alui (al'ōōs), suĭt (sūt), pursuĭt', recruĭt' (-krōōt'), &c.

Uo = wō, as in quŏr'um (kwŏrŏ'-), quo'ta, quote, quota'tion, quotid'ian, quo'tie siliquose', &c., and in monosyllables and open accented syllables generally.[154]

uo = wŏ, in quŏb (kwŏb), quŏd, quod'libet, quŏll, quŏn'dam, and two or thr others.[151] uo = wŭ, in the obsolete word quoth (kwŭth).[151]

Uoi = woy, as in quoif (kwoyf)[154], quoin (kwoyn), quoit (kwoyt).[155]

Uoy = woy, in buoy (bwoy).[155]

Uy = ĭ, when final in monosyllables and accented syllables, as in buy (bĭ), gu buy'ing, buy'er, the only words in which this digraph is so situated.

uy = we, as in col'loquy (-kwe), ob'loquy, solil'oquy, and final unaccented syllab generally; but not in the 'formatives' of words in which ue final is sile as the colloquial adjectives plaguy (plāg'-e), roguy (rōg'-e), &c., in whi the u forms part of the 'simple'.[156]

Yew = ū or yōō, a diphthongal sound heard in yew, yew'en, and yew'-tree.[157]

You = ū or yōō, as in you, your, &c.[157]

25. The effect of accent, and of its absence, on the sounds of the vowels, been alluded to in the previous Sections.[158] The peculiar exertion of the org of speech necessary to produce accent, has an obvious tendency to preserve sounds of the letters under it, whether vowel or consonantal, pure, distinct, uniform; whilst the preparation and attention necessary to this exertion of organs, and the relaxation and feebleness which succeed it, in most cases, naturally cause the sounds immediately preceding and following it, to suffer length and distinctness, or to sink into others somewhat different but of eas utterance than those which they replace. These effects and changes occur in most marked degree with the vowels, both 'open' and 'stopped', because on th depend the causation and length of syllables, and on them chiefly depends concrete movement of the voice through all the various intervals of pitch emplo in the emphatic and elegant purposes of speech.

When a vowel other than e mute ends an unaccented syllable, or when it fo one, it has, unless otherwise marked, a sound relatively fainter or obscurer, somewhat shorter, than in an accented syllable, or in monosyllables and cert final syllables ending in e mute. This sound of a is usually the 'brief Italia (ă), heard in ab'acus, impĕr'ative, Amĕr'ica, papa', &c.[159] The corresponding so of e, i, and y, is usually the 'open' or 'alphabetic' e (e), slightly shortened, a [153] But in fruĭtion, and many other words, the u and i occur in separate syllables.

[154] Usually spelled soif, and pronounced regularly. See Oi.

[155] The sound given to uoi and uoy in these words, is a proper triphthong. See Sectio 3. On the sound of q and u in all the preceding vowel-combinations, see Sections 18 an and page 551.

[156] A remark which applies generally to the 'formatives' of words ending in ue silen roguish (rōg'-ĭsh, from rogue), &c.; but roguery (rōg'-ĕr-e) is always pronounced in syllables.

ment, merit', ed'ifice, la'bial, sygrin"ga, &c.; but sometimes, as with substantives, adjectives, and adverbs ending with y, this sound is even reduced to 'brief' e, as in beau'ty, cit'y, du'ty, hard'y, free'ly, &c.[160] The unaccented o and u have generally their open, alphabetic sound, full, or nearly full, when occurring either immediately before or after the accent, and in certain final syllables ending in e mute, as monop'oly, incor'porate, unite', ed'ucate, lec'ture, reg'ular, &c., but otherwise slightly shortened and fainter, like the other vowels[161]. The diphthongs oi or oy, and ou or ow, also, under like circumstances, preserve their characteristic sounds, and to a similar degree[162].

The chief exceptions to the above sounds of the unaccented open vowels occur with i, y (which is merely another form of i), and u:—With i and y, when these letters retain the sound of the long diphthongal i (ī), as in monosyllables ending with y, and in the final syllable of ed'ify, pūr'ify, and other verbs of like formation; in many initial and prepositive syllables, and some final syllables, when immediately followed or preceded by the accent, as i-de'a, biquad'rate, hyper'bola, fail'ure, &c.; at the end of words from the Greek and Latin; and in some other cases[163]:—With u, when this letter follows r, j, or l in the same syllable, in which case it either wholly or partially loses its diphthongal character, being reduced to oo or ōō, as noticed in Section 18.

When an unaccented syllable ends in a consonant, the vowel which it contains if single, has, in general, its regular short or stopped sound, though somewhat fainter and less distinct than in an accented syllable, as assign', entreat', the'orist, connect'ive, cal'umny, &c. This tendency to obscurity is greatest in syllables occurring after the accent, and particularly in final ones; but, except with o in the cases noticed in Sections 17, and with e, i, o, y, in the final and relatively unstopped syllables er, ir, or, and yr, and in a few others indicated in the 'notation', or referred to under the respective vowels, this sound should never be allowed, even colloquially, to degenerate into that of ŭ in tub, or even into one closely approaching it.[164]

Words occurring in this Dictionary which have, or which may have, this obscurity of the unaccented vowels, particularly with o or a before r[165], are generally referred, by figures, to this Section.[166]

26. The modifying influence of r on a preceding vowel has been alluded to when speaking of the respective vowels, in the preceding Sections. The general effect of this letter on the vowels requires, however, a separate notice:—

In reference to the long or open vowels, it must be observed, that 'the vowel sounds in fare, mere, fire, ore, cure, poor, our, are so modified by the guttural

[164] Mr Smart asserts that 'in (final) unaccented syllables ar, er, ir, yr, or, ur, and even re, are pronounced with identical effect'; in which he follows Sheridan, Knowles, and Walker. Dr Webster, and some other recent orthoëpists, hold, and we think correctly, a contrary opinion. In clear and elegant pronunciation, subject to the exceptions noticed in the Text, we believe that these sounds never sink quite into the sound of ŭ, each vowel preserving, to a certain degree, its own character, although it may be greatly obscured or slurred in utterance, owing to the feeble organic effort made to produce it.
[165] As sec'retary, satisfac'tory, &c.
[166] 'It may, indeed, be observed, that there is scarcely anything more distinguishes a person of mean and of good education, than the pronunciation of the unaccented vowels. When vowels are under the accent, the prince, and the lowest of the people in the Metropolis, with very few exceptions, pronounce them in the same manner; but the "unaccented vowels" in the mouth of the former, have a distinct, open, and specific sound, while the latter often totally sink them, or soften them into some other (allied) sound. Those, therefore, who wish to pronounce elegantly, must be particularly attentive to the unaccented vowels; as a neat pronunciation of these forms one of the greatest beauties of speaking'. (Walker.)

vibration in which they terminate, as to be diphthongal' (but not dissyllabic) 'in their effect on the ear'; and this 'not only where the sound was previously diphthongal but where it was simple. The remark is practically important, because it may prevent a provincial pronunciation of the vowels we hear in the first syllable of vary (vâre'-e), serious (sēre'-e-ŭs), wiry (wīre'-e), porous (pōre'-ŭs), curate (kūre'-āte), and the like; which are wrongly', though usually referred in dictionaries, 'to the same mode of pronunciation as the first syllables of va'cant, se'crete wi'ly, cu'bic, &c.'[167] In the words containing r, above given, and in all similar words when easily and elegantly pronounced, the vowel is not merely lengthened and modified as noticed, but unites itself to the r in utterance, in the manner indicated in the parenthesis following each of the words given as examples.

Of vowels, ordinarily short by position, occurring before r final, it must be observed, that—

a. When, in an accented syllable, a vowel occurs before r final, and the following syllable commences with a vowel, or with another r, so that ending the one spoken syllable the r also begins the next, the vowel is 'shortened' or 'stopped' by the r as completely as by any other consonant, and, under like conditions, preserves this 'short' or 'stopped' sound pure, as in ăr'id, măr'ry, bĕr'yl, pĕr'il, fĕr'ry, spĭr'it, mĭr'ror, flŏr'id, sŏr'row, cŭr'rier, hŭr'ricane, lŭr'ic, &c.; but not in stârr' (stâr'-e), tarr'y (smeared with tar), err'ing, stirr'ing, curr'ish, concurr'ing, or other like 'formatives' from words in -r, which follow their 'primitives' in pronunciation as noticed below.[168]

b. When, in an accented syllable, in monosyllables, and often in unaccented syllables immediately preceding the accent, a vowel occurs before r final, or before r followed by another consonant, or even under the accent before rr in 'formatives' from 'primitives' ending in r, the vowel, though otherwise short by position and often marked as short, is not identical with the corresponding letter in a men, pit, cot, hut, &c., but is relatively 'unstopped', and has a longer, and with a and o, a broader sound, caused by the palatal or guttural vibration of the r, into which the vowel runs, as heard in bar, far, cart, par'ty, her, berth, mer'cy, per'fect, vir'tue, chord, mor'tal, or'der, perform', fur, curb, disturb', myrrh, myr'tle, preferr'ing, incurr'ing, whirr'ing, &c.; in which it may be observed, that the a before 'r' is identical with the 'Italian a' (ā, sometimes, in unacc. syl., shortened to ă), whilst the o before 'r', is identical with the 'broad' or 'German a' (ā, ăw, or)[169]. This effect of the r on the vowels, however, ceases the moment that r becomes a 'decided consonant', which occurs under the conditions noticed in the preceding paragraph[170]; and it is, for the most part, either wholly lost or obscured in the final unaccented syllables of words, as explained in the previous Section.[171]

27. The peculiar slight sound, as of a faint or partially suppressed e, indicated in the 'notation' of this Dictionary by (') written before the following vowel, occurs after j and l before the sound of o͞o, as in Jew (j'o͞o), jury (j'o͞or'-e), lute (l'o͞te), lurid (l'o͞or'-id), pollution (-l'o͞o'-shŭn), &c.[172]; before ā (ā-i), er, and ī, when preceded by k, or c or g hard, as in card (k'ārd), guard (g'ārd), girl (g'ĕrl), kind (k'īnd), &c.[173]; after c and s sounded as sh or zh, as in social

[169] Under these 'circumstances final r is not a decided consonant'. (Smart.)

(so'-sh'ăl), capricious (-prĭsh'-'ŭs), sure (sh'o͝or), leisure (lē'-sh'o͝or), &c.[174]; after t, when it suffers a similar change of sound, as in sa'tiate (-sh'āte), novitiate (-vĭsh'-'āte); and sometimes after the sound of g soft, and one or two other consonants when followed by vowels, as in bluď geon (-j'ŭn), sōl'dier (-j'ẽr), ammōn'ia (-y'ă), cadĕm'ial (-y'ăl), right'eous (-y'ŭs), &c.[175]

This slight sound, as of a faint or half-suppressed e, is not always marked in the 'notation' of the words in which it occurs; but only in some of them, to serve as examples of the rest. As, however, it is organically, and almost of necessity inserted in a clear, easy, and elegant pronunciation of all words of the classes referred to, the speaker has only to be careful to avoid giving it too much distinctness, or, by exaggeration, to allow a grace of elocution to degenerate into vulgarity or affectation.[176]

The apostrophe (') is also sometimes used in the 'notation' of words, to shew that l or n after a suppressed e, still forms a separate, though an obscure syllable, as in sparkling (spārk'-'l-ĭng), deadening (dĕd'-'n-ĭng), &c., which are often incorrectly uttered in only two syllables by careless speakers.[177]

CONSONANTS.

Of the Consonants of the common alphabet, those which are (except in intensity) uniform in their sound under all the conditions arising from the position of the accent and combination with other letters, do not require a particular notice here. Those which are otherwise circumstanced, together with the leading consonantal sounds of the spoken language, are briefly noticed in the following pages[1]:—

B.

(See page 33, and Sections 2, 5, 45, &c.[2])

C.

28. C has two sounds—the one, hard, like k, when it occurs before a, o, and u, as in cat, cord, curd, scot; or before l or r, or k or t final, as in cloth, craft, crack,

[174-5] See Sections 13, 15, 18, 28, 35-6, &c.

[176] The vicious exaggeration of this faint sound (') has been already briefly referred to in previous Sections. Affected speakers often substitute ē for ('), and say kē-ĭnd, gē-ĭde, &c., for k'ĭnd, guide (g'ĭde), &c., an error not unfrequently perpetrated on the stage. Rigidly speaking, this added sound after k, and g and c hard, belongs to the consonant, and not to the vowel; the y, in this case, being 'the proper sound of the Sanscrit palatal g', a separate element, according to Mr Ellis, 'now called j'. The same also applies to k, and to c sounded as k; and, probably, to other cases. This sound occurs in French, 'where it is represented by gu or qu'. (Ellis.)

[177] These applications of the apostrophe, of course, do not interfere with its common uses in punctuation, or to shew the omission of a letter, or other part of a word, or as a sign of the genitive case.

[1] For Lists and an analysis of the Consonants, both 'spoken' and 'written', see Sections 1, 2, 5; and on their Organic formation, see page xix, and the respective letters and digraphs in their alphabetical places in the body of the Dictionary. For the 'powers' of various combinations and groups of letters which are irregular or uncertain in sound, or which do not correspond in speech and writing, when not noticed under their leading letter or letters below, see Section 45.

[2] B after m, or before t, in the same syllable, is usually silent; as noticed in Section 45.

tract; and when it ends a syllable or word, as in vic'tim, flac'cid, frol'ic, mu'sic, traff'ic, &c.[3]:—the other, soft, like s, when it comes before e (even if mute), i, or y, as in cell, civ'il, cy'press, scep'tre, sci'ence, face, pace, trance, &c.[4] In many words, as can'cer, concise', cir'cuit, certif'icate, &c., both these sounds of c occur.

When c comes after the accent, either primary or secondary, and is followed by e or i, and another vowel or vowels, it takes the sound of sh, and usually with more or less absorption of the e or i in utterance; as in o'cean (-shăn), ceta'ceous (-sh'ŭs), so'cial (-sh'ăl), gra'cious (-sh'ŭs), fascia'tion (făsh-e-), negocia'tion (-she-ā'-), &c. The chief exceptions are confined to cases in which the ce or ci precedes a combination having the sound of sh, when, in order to prevent an unpleasant or difficult repetition of the aspirate, the c may retain its usual soft sound, as it always does, according to polite usage, in certain words, as depreci'ation (-se-ā'-shŭn; not -she-ā'-), pronuncia'tion (-se-ā'-), &c.[5] When, however, the ce or ci is aspirated in this position, the vowel either retains its usual sound (e), or is more freely given than if indicated by (ʼ), as may be seen in the above examples.[6]

C is silent in czar, czarina, czarish, czarowitz, &c.; also before t in the words victuals (s.), victual (v.), indict (-dīt'), and their 'formatives'; and after s in the termination -scle, as ar'buscle, cor'puscle, muscle, &c. In discern', discern'ing, discern'ment, &c., sacrifice (v.), sice, and suffice' (as often heard), it has the sound of z.[7]

CH.

29. The regular sound of this digraph in English words, and which it is always used to express in the 'notation' of this Dictionary, is that of tsh, as heard in *ch*eap (tshēpe), ea*ch* (ētsh), *ch*urch (tshûrtsh), ri*ch* (rĭtsh), &c.[8]

Ch is hard, or has the sound of k, in words from the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, and their cognate languages, in scientific terms formed from them, and in Latinised words generally, as in a*ch*e (āke), a'*ch*or, a*ch*romat'ic (ăk-), an'ar*ch*y, an*ch*'or (ăngk'-), an*ch*'oret, arch*æ*'al (-kē'-), arch*æ*ol'ogy, arc*h*a'ic (-kā'-), arc*h*ipel'ago, ar'*ch*ives, ar'*ch*on, ca*ch*ec'tic, ca*ch*ex'y, catech*e*c'tic, cat'e*ch*ise (-kīze), cat'e*ch*ism, cat'e*ch*ist, catech*u*'men (-kū'-), *ch*alced'ony (kăl-sĕd'-), *ch*alcog'raphy, *Ch*alda'ic, *ch*al*y*b'eate (kă-), *ch*amĕl'eon, *ch*am'omile, *ch*a'os, *ch*aot'ic, *ch*ar'acter (kăr'-), *ch*ar'acterise, *ch*aracteris'tic, *ch*ar'ta[9], *ch*asm (kăzm), *ch*em'ist (kĭm'-) or *ch*ȳm'ist, *ch*em'ical or *ch*ȳm'ical, *Ch*er'sonese, *ch*imēr'a (ke-), *ch*irog'raphy (kī-), *ch*irop'odist, *ch*irur'gery, *ch*irur'gical, *ch*i'tine, *ch*oir (kwīre), *ch*ol'agogue (kŏl'-), *ch*ol'er, *ch*ol'era, *ch*ol'eric, *ch*ondrol'ogy, *ch*ord, *ch*ordee' (-dē'), *ch*ore'a, *ch*ōre', *ch*or'ister (kŏr'-), *ch*orog'raphy, *ch*ōr'us (kōre'-), *ch*yle, *ch*yme, coch'leary (kŏk'-), coch'leate, con*ch* (kŏngk), con''*ch*oid, conch*o*id'al, conch*o*l'ogy, dis'ti*ch* (-tĭk), drac*h*'ma, ecch*y*mo'sis

[3] On the orthography of the 'formatives' of such words, see Section 51.

[4] Scep'tic (skĕp'-), scep'tical, scep'ticism, scir'rhus (skĭr'-), scir'rhous, scirros'ity, &c., are exceptions. Dr Johnson spells sceptic with k, instead of c; but this orthography has never obtained credit among respectable writers. In other cases in which c comes between s and e or i, in the same syllable, it may be regarded either as soft or mute.

[5] Sheridan and Walker aspirate the c in all, or nearly all the words alluded to as exceptions; Smart does the same in many of them; Knowles in none of them; of each of which examples will be found in the body of this Dictionary. See Sections 35, 36.

[6] Cal'ceated, and a few other words accented on the first syllable, are now also usually heard with the ce or ci pure. Bru'cia, cal'cium, and several other Latin or Latinised scientific words, are frequently pronounced both ways; but generally with the c as sh, unless otherwise marked in the Dictionary.

[7] For the sound of the c in ce and ci, in Italian words, see Section 99.

[8] Mr Walker states that ch sounds 'like sh after l or n, as in belch, bench, filch, &c., pronounced bĕlsh, bĕnsh, fĭlsh, &c.'; but this is a license now only tolerated in familiar discourse, and is particularly avoided by all correct and elegant speakers. Mr Smart, the Editor of 'Walker Remodelled', and the chief living exponent of Mr Walker's principles, pronounces these, and all similar words, bĕltch (i. e., bĕltsh), bĕntsh, fĭltch, &c. See Section 2.

[9] But in chart, char'ter, chart'ulary, the ch is usually, and correctly, sounded as tsh.

(ĕk-ē-), ech'inate, *ech*i'nus, *ech*o (ĕk'-o), *ech*om'etry, ep'och (-ŏk), ep'*och*a (-kȧ), eu'nuch, eu'*nuch*ate, head'*ach*e, hem'ist*ich*, here'si*arch*, hi'er*arch*, hi'er*arch*y, ich*neu*'mon (ĭk-nū'-), ich*nog*'raphy, i'chor (-kŏr), i'*chor*ous, Ich*thyog*'raphy, ich*thyol*'ogy, li'chen[10], loch*i*'a (-kī'-), mech'*i*nate (mĕk'-), mĕch*ina*'tion[11], mas'tich, mech*an*'ic (-kăn'-), mech*an*'ical, mĕch*an*i''cian (mĕk-), mĕch'anism, mĕch'anist, mon'arch, mon'*arch*y, monarch'ical, mon'ostich, orches'tra (-kēs'-), or'chestre, or'chestral, orchida'ceous, orch*id*'eous, paren''chyma (-rĕng'-ke-), pen'tateuch (-tūks), scheme (skēm), sche'zis, schet'ic, schir'rhous, schis'ma (skĭz'-), schol'ar, scholas'tic, school, stom'ach (-ăk), stomach'ic (-măk'-)[12], tech'nical (tĕk'-), tech'nics, *tech*nol''gical, *tech*nol'ogy, trache'a, tracheot'omy, trocha'ic (-kā'-), trochan'ter, tro'che, tro'chee, tro'chil, trochil'ic, trŏch'ilus, trŏch'lea, troch'leary, tro'choid, and many others; and generally in all words and syllables in which initial ch is followed by l or r, as chlo'rine, *Chr*ist, chromat'ic, catachre'sis, chronol'ogy, chrys'alis, &c.; and in all ancient proper names and adjectives formed from them, as Arch*ime*'des (-ke-mē'-dēz), archimede'an, Ba''ruch, E'noch, &c.; also in the Celtic word loch (lŏk), and a few words from the Arabic and Coptic.

The chief exceptions to the preceding Rules are arch (see below), arched, arch'er, arch'ery, chlo'rity, chlo'rable, che'rub[13], che'rubim, cheru'bic (che-rōō'-), and Ra'chel, which being perfectly anglicised, have the ch as in English words (tsh).

In reference to arch (pfx), signifying 'chief', it may be remarked, that when it occurs before a vowel, in words from the Greek, the ch has the sound of k, as in arch*ăn*'gel (ārk-), arch*iepis*'copal, arch'itect, &c.; but when it is prefixed to a mere English word beginning with a consonant, it has the sound of tsh (ch), as in arch*bish*'op, arch*deacon* (-dē'kn), arch*duke*', &c.; a sound which it also sometimes bears in compounds of our own, even before words beginning with a vowel, as arch-en'emy (ārtch-), arch-fiend, arch-rogue, &c.

Ch is soft, like sh, in many words adopted or derived from the French, or received through that language, though now fully incorporated with our own, as *cha*uffin' (-shēn'), cartouch' (-tōōsh'), *cha*green' (shā-), *cha*grin' (-grēn'), chaise (shāz), cham'ois (shăm'-), Champagne', champaign', cham'perty, champignon (-pēn'-yŭn), chancre (shăng'-), chas'seur, chatean' (-tō'), chef, chef-d'œuv're, chemise' (-mēz'), chemiste', cheroot', chĕvalier', chev'ron, chev'rotain, chicane', chicān'ery, chiffonier', chival'ric, chiv'alrous, chiv'alry, machine' (-shēn'), machin'al (-shēn'-), machin'er, machin'ery, machin'ing (a., s.), machin'ist[14], mar'chioness (-shūn-), mars'chal (mär'-shăl) or mar'échal, and many others. The chief exceptions occur in words which, though received through the French, are primarily derived from the learned languages, and in which the ch is hence preserved hard (k) by the French themselves[15].

Ch is silent in dra*chm*[16], sched'ule (skĕd'-), schism (sĭzm), schismat'ic, schis'matise, ya*cht* (yŏt), ya*cht*'ing, and, perhaps, one or two others. Ostrich has the ch as in English words (tsh), though marked os'trĭj by Mr Walker, and often heard so colloquially.

[10] Thus as a Latin, botanical, or medical word; but lī'ch-ĕn, as an English word denoting 'Iceland moss', and in other common applications. So also of li*chen*'ic, li*ch*'en*ine*, and Lichenog'raphy, which always preserve the ch hard, when used as scientific terms.

[11] But not in machine' (-shēn'), nor its direct 'formatives' machinal, machiner, machinery, machinist, which have the ch like sh, on account of their having been received by us through the French.

[12] But not in stom'acher (-chēr).

[13] But Cherub, a city of Babylonia, is regular, being pronounced kē'-rŭb.

[14] But not in mach'inate (măk'-), and its 'formatives', on account of its direct derivation from the Latin. See Note 11.

[15] Several examples of the kind referred to, will be found in the List of words with ch hard, given in the preceding paragraph.

[16] But it is heard in drach'ma (drăk'-; v. su.).

G.

30. G has two sounds—the one, simple and hard, and which this letter always expresses in the 'notation' of this Dictionary, heard when it occurs before a[19], o, u, h (gh-), l (gl-), or r (gr-), as in game, go, gun, ghŏst, glory, grandeur, vul'gar, vig'our; and at the end of words, and in the 'common formatives' of such words (even though the g be doubled, and followed by e, i, or y), as in beg, frog, egg, ragg'ed, twigg'en, digg'ing, drugg'ist, sluggʹish, cragg'y, foggʹy, &c.[20]:—the other, compound and soft, like j, which (subject to the exceptions below) it generally bears before e, i, and y, as in gem (jĕm), ge'nius, gi'ant, E'gypt (-jĭpt), el'egy, Gip'sy, congeal' (-jēlʹ), change (chānje), rānge, avenge (-vĕnj'), &c.[21]

The exceptions to the soft sound of g before e, i, and y, occur chiefly in words from the Saxon, in Hebrew proper names[22], in some words adopted or derived from the German, and in a very few scientific terms from the Greek which have, as yet, escaped the general rule, though liable to its application. Thus, the g is hard in an"ger, beget', begin', beginn'er, beginn'ing, begird', begirt', bigg'in, con"ger, dagg'er, dogg'ed, dogg'er, dogg'erel, dogg'erman, dogg'ers, drugg'et, ĕa'ger, ĕa'gerness, Elg'in, forget', forget'ful, forgĭve', forgĭve'ness, forgiv'ing, gear, geck, geese, geest, gehenn'a, geld (s., v.), geld'ing, gelt (prt.), geld'er-rose, ge'rah, get, gew'gaw (gū'-), gey'ser (g'ī'-), gib, gib'-cat[23], gibbe, gibb'er, gibb'erish, gibb'le-gabble, gibbosc', [17] When D follows the accent, it is apt to slide into the sound of j; as in sŏl'dier (-jūr), and two or three others. Mr Walker extends this license to all words in which d occurs 'after the accent, either primary or secondary, and is followed by ia, ie, io, or eou', and even u 'where it is a diphthong' (i. e., ū); as in grandeur, verdure, education, &c., which he marks grăn'-jūr, vĕr'-jūre, ĕd-jū-kā'-shūn, &c., instead of grănd'-yūr, vĕrd'-ūre, ĕd-ū-kā'-shūn, &c. This pronunciation Mr Walker calls 'elegant'; but the vitiation of the d, in such cases, is now carefully avoided by all correct and unaffected speakers.

[18] In of the 'f' has the sound of v; but when this preposition is final in compounds, as in hereof, thereof, whereof, the f remains sharp or pure. Ph is a common equivalent of this letter, as heard in *ph*antom, *ph*ilosophy, &c.

[19] Gaol (jāle), and its 'compounds', are the only exceptions.

[20] This 'hard sound' may be regarded as the natural sound of the 'alphabetic g', and is so called by Latham and others.

When gg occurs before e, and is so situated that the first g ends a syllable, and the second g begins one, the former usually takes the sound of d, or is altogether dropped, whilst the latter is soft and regular, as in suggest (sŭd-jĕstʹ), exaggerate (ĕgz-ăj'-ĕr-āte), &c. This change is necessary to render the word or combination pronounceable.

[21] In the last three words, and in others of the same orthography, the first element of the soft g (i. e., the d of the dzh), is less strongly marked in utterance, than in its other combinations; and is hence, often wholly sunk by careless, illiterate, and feeble speakers, who say strānzhe, &c., for strānj'e or strāndzhe, &c.

[22] As Ge'bal (gē'-; not jē'-), Gethsem'ane (-ă-ne), Gĭd'eon, &c. But Gen'esis (jĕn'-), Gen'tiles, Ger'falcon or Gŷr'falcon, Gĭĕr'-ĕagle, and Gor'gias, have the g soft, like j. Bethpage also, from being received through the Greek of the New Testament, has the g soft, bĕth'-pā-je; often incorrectly pronounced by the unlettered in two syllables, bĕth'-pāge. Genesareth, for a like reason, is also sometimes heard with the g soft; but is now very seldom so pronounced by classical speakers.

[23] Gib'-staff is heard both ways; but usually with the g soft.

gibb'ous, gidd'y, gift (s., v.), gift'ed, gig, gigg'le, gig'let, gild, gild'er, gild'ing, gill (of a fish)[24], gilse, gilt (prt., pp., a., s.), gim'bals, gim'blet or gim'let, gimp, ging'ham, gin''glymoid (anat.), gin''glymus (do.), gird (g'ĕrd), gird'ed, gird'er, gird'le, girl, girl'ish, gĭr'rock, girt (pp., s., vt.), girth, give, giz'zard, gyle'-tun (brew.; dist.), hagg'is, mēa'ger, nigg'ard, nigg'ardly, nig'er (vulg. for negro), nogg'en (a.), nogg'in (s.), nogg'ing (arch.), Pegg'y (for Margaret), pett'ifogger, pigg'ery, pigg'in, rigg'er (mech.), rigg'ing (naut., &c.), Ri'gel (ast.), sagg'er (pot.), stagg'er (v.), stagg'ers (s.), swagg'er (s., v.), tar'get, targetiēr', ti'ger, togeth'er, togg'el (naut.), togg'ery, trigg'er (of a gun), and a few others, with their 'formatives' and 'compounds'[25]; to which may be added the 'formatives' of all words ending with g hard, as noticed in a previous paragraph.

In a few words adopted from the French, the g before e and i, retains its Gallic sound of zh; as in bou'gie (-zhē), mirage (-rāzhe'), rouge (rōōzhe), &c.

The powers of the consonant-combinations gh, ght, gm, and gn, are noticed in Sections 45, 99.

H.

31. This letter is generally sounded at the beginning of words and syllables, as in hat, horse, hull, fŏrs'head, perhaps', ve'hement, &c. The exceptions in English are few, and easily remembered.

It was formerly always omitted in—heir, heir'ess, herb, herba'ceous, herb'age, herb'al, (†)

hon'est, honesty, honour, hon'ourable,
hon'orary (†),[26]
hos'pital (†), hostler (ŏs'-lĕr),
hour, hourly,
hum'ble (†),
humbles (incor. orthog. of umbles), hum'ble-pie, humour, hu'morous, hu'morist, hu'morsome, hu'moral, (†) with their 'formatives' and 'compounds'. At present it is usual to preserve the h in 'hospital', and in 'herb' and its formatives and compounds; and many careful speakers do the same in honorary, humble, humour, humorist, humorous, humorsome, &c., a practice which seems to be daily increasing in prevalence. As, however, usage is not strict or uniform in respect to those of the words in above list which are followed by a 'note of interrogation', they are still heard both ways, even among the educated.[27]

H is always silent after r (rh- or -rh), as in rhap'sody (rhăp'-), rhet'oric, rheumatism, catarrh', myrrh, &c.; and after g (gh-) at the beginning of a word or syllable, as in ghost, ghast'ly; also when final, and preceded by a vowel, as in ah!, oh!, foh!, Sūr'ah (ă), Messi'ah, &c.[28]

When h follows w (wh-), it is sounded before that letter, as in what (hwŏt), where (hwāre), while (hwīle), &c. The only exceptions are who (hōō), whom [24] Gill, a measure, is regular (jil).

[25] Gyves (jīvez), from its Celtic origin, ought to have the g hard, and is so marked by Knowles, Scott, and Sheridan; but usage has decided otherwise.
[26] But in honorable'ness the h is always sounded.
[27] Mr Smart separates the h in herb (and its 'formatives'), hospital, and humor (humour); but not in humour (turn or temper of mind), and its 'formatives'. Dr Webster retains the h in hospital, hostler, humble, and humour, with their 'formatives', whilst Mr Walker marks it as silent in all the words contained in the above List. Ben Jonson omitted the h in host.
[28] See Section 45; also Note 29 (below).

J.

32. This letter has one uniform sound, that of dzh, as heard in jest (dzhĕst), judge, jour'ney, &c.; which sound it is always used to express in the 'notation' of this Dictionary. It is thus equivalent to soft g; and only differs from that letter in retaining its sound unaltered before all the vowels. In hallelu'jah (now gen. wr. hallelujah) it has the sound of y or i.[30]

[29] Many persons omit the aspirate at the beginning of words, and more particularly when it occurs in the middle of words after the accent. Others not only omit h where it should be sounded, but aspirate it where it should be silent, and even insert it in words in which it does not occur. The improper omission and insertion of the h, is in the highest degree vulgar; and 'trifling as it appears at first sight, tends greatly to weaken and impoverish the pronunciation, as well as, sometimes, to confound words of very different meaning'. (Walker.)

[30] See Sections 2, 5, 99.

[31] It is always silent before n, as in knell, knife, &c.

[32] L is often silent before a final consonant, particularly m, and sometimes before this letter even when it commences the following syllable, as in almond (ah'-mŭnd). It also often lengthens, and even changes the quality of the vowel, as in call, calm, toll, &c.; as noticed in the previous Sections.

[33] In the obsolete orthographies compt, accompt, comptrol, comptroller (obs. exc. as applied to a public officer or supervisor), &c., the mp sounds like n. M is also silent before n initial or final. See Section 45.

[34] N final, after l or m in the same syllable, is silent, as in kiln, hymn, condemn, solemn, &c.; but it is always sounded in those compounds in which the m or n occurs in separate syllables, as condemna'tion (-dĕm-nā'-), condem'natory, hym'nic, &c. It is also usually preserved in lim'ning (s.); and in solemn discourse, by some speakers in the p. and pp. of the verbs condemn, contemn, hymn, and one or two others.

P.

(See page 456, and Sections 2, 5, 45, &c.[25])

Q.

33. This letter has the sound of k, and only occurs before u, the combination having, in English words, the sound of kw; as in quack (kwăk), queen, quan'tity, &c.

In words from the French, the u after q, in the same syllable, is generally silent, and, with the e, is always so in the frequent termination -que, as in antique (-tēk'), burlesque (-lĕsk'), cheq'uer (-ĕr), con"quer (kŏng'-kĕr)[26], oblique (-lēk')[27], quadrille' (kă-drĭl'), &c.[28]

R.

34. This letter has two sounds—the one, trilled and strongly consonantal, heard at the beginning of words and syllables, as in rose, pride, trill, spray, destroy, &c.:—the other, smoother and deeper, but less vibratory and decided, heard at the end of words and syllables, or before a final letter, as in bar, bare, matter, card, swarm, darken, regard, &c.[29]

R is never silent; but its sound is sometimes transposed, as in a'ore (ā'-kĕr)[40], cen'tre, fi'bre, mass'acre[40], mā'gre[40], the'atre, sep'ulchre, &c., and all words ending in -re after a consonant in the same syllable, and unaccented. Also in the word iron (ī'-ŭrn) and its compounds[41]; and in the colloquial pronunciation of a'pron (-pŭrn), and saff'ron (-ŭrn)[42].

The effect of the letter r on a preceding vowel, vowel-digraph, or diphthong, is noticed in Section 26, and under the individual vowels.

35. The letter s has two sounds—the one, sharp and hissing, which may be regarded as its proper and peculiar sound, heard in saint, send, this, sis'ter, cy'prus:

[25] P is silent before s, sh, and t, at the beginning of words, as in psalm (sahm), psalter, pseu'do-, pshaw (!), ptar'migan, Ptol'emy, &c. It is silent, or but very faintly heard, when occurring between m and t at the end of a word or syllable, as in tempt, attempt', exempt', exemp'tion (except in formal discourse), per'emptory, promp'titude, &c.; but it is generally sounded in this position whenever the t goes to the following syllable, and in the middle of words when it can be uttered without any particular effort of the organs of speech, as in consump'tion, assump'tive, presump'tion, sump'tuous, &c. Colloquially the p is often, or perhaps, usually omitted in words of this class; but this should be avoided in formal discourse.

P is also mute in rasp'berry (răz'-), receipt, semp'ster, semp'stress, semp'tress, accompt (see Note 33), and the Fr. word corps (kōr); and in a few others. In cup'board (kŭb'-ŭrd) it coalesces with, and assumes the sound of the following consonant. See Note 18 (antè), and Section 45.

[26] But not in conquest (kŏng'-kwĕst), which is regular.

[27] But not in obliquity (-lĭk'-wit-e).

[28] Quoif, quoin, quoit, have the qu as kw, though often heard colloquially with it as simple k. The words quote, quot'able, quota'tion, are also regular; the pronunciation kōte, kota'tion, &c., is now obsolete or vulgar.

[29] On the nature of these sounds and the distinction between them, see Section 2, and page 356.

[40] The transposition is necessary in these words to keep the c and g hard. Meager for 'meagre', though often met with, is hence objectionable.

[41] But not in irony (ī'-rūn-e), which has a different derivation.

[42] Cit'ern, chil'dern, and hun'dred, for cit'ron (-rūn), chil'dren, and hun'dred, though sanctioned by Mr Walker, colloquially, are now vulgarisms.

—the other, flat and buzzing (= z), heard in his (hĭz), was, desire' (-zīr'), wis'dom, &c. It also, in certain positions, passes into the sound of sh or zh, as noticed below.[43]

S has always its sharp sound at the beginning of words, as in the above examples; and when it immediately follows a 'sharp consonant' in the same syllable, as in scoffs, blocks, hips, pits, cap'sule, tip'sy, trick'sy, &c., or when it is added to e mute after any of these letters, as strifes, flakes, pipes, mites, &c.; also, generally, when it immediately follows a 'flat consonant' or a 'liquid' if not in the same syllable, as in subserve', subside', ab'solute, &c.[44] It is also sharp when doubled and final in words, as guess, hiss, kiss, amiss', or (except before u, or e or i followed by another vowel) when it is doubled in the middle of words, as in dis'onant, dissuade' (-swād'), less'en, miss'ile, pass'ive, progress'ive, &c.[45]; also (except in whereas, -ăz', which follows its 'simple') when single at the end of all words of two or more syllables, if it be preceded by any vowel but e, and at the same time occurs in a distinct syllable, as At'las, ba'sis, bi'as, cha'os, chŏr'us, Cy'prus, metrop'olis, &c.; and in the words this, thus, us, gas, yes, though monosyllables. It is also sharp (except in cleanse and its 'formatives') in words ending in -se preceded by l, n, or r, as pulse, dense, sense, transe (for trance), intense', verse, ad'verse, &c.; and (except in wise, wīze, otherguise, -g'īze, these, those) always in adjectives, and generally in substantives of this termination, when it is preceded by a vowel, as in base, obese, close, arenose', verbose', loose, abstruse', diffuse', recluse', abuse' (s.), crease, grouse, house, &c.; also (except in discern and its 'formatives') in all words in which s occurs before c, as descend' (-sĕnd'), emas'culate, fres'co, nas'cent (năs'-ĕnt), os'cillate, &c.

S is sharp in the 'inseparable preposition' dis- when under the accent, either primary or secondary, as dis'olute, disabil'ity, disagree', &c.[46]; and when unaccented, if the following syllable be accented, and begins with a sharp consonant, as in discred'it, disfa'vour, dispense', distaste', &c.; also always in the 'inseparable preposition' mis-, as mis'creant, misapply', misuse' (s., v.), misgov'ern, &c.

It is also generally sharp after the 'inseparable prepositions' pre- and pro-, and is always so after pre- and re- when the 'added word' is significant by itself, or when the s after re- is followed by a 'sharp' consonant, as in presuppose', presurmise', resign' (to sign again[47]), research' (s., v.), respect', restrict', &c.

It is also generally sharp in the 'terminations' -sary, -scry, -sory, -sive, -some; and often so in other combinations at the end of words, as noticed in Section 45.

S is soft or flat, like z, when it immediately follows a 'flat consonant' at the end of a syllable, either in spelling or utterance, as heads (hĕdz), ribs, stags, cat'alogues (-lŏgz); when it is final after a 'liquid', as in mŏr'als, seems, means, hers; and when it precedes a 'liquid' or a 'flat consonant', as in cosmet'ic (kŏz-), desmol'ogy, dis'mal, pis'mire, chasm, prism, mi'crocosm (-kŏzm), par'oxysm, wis'dom, preside'[48], pres'ident (prĕz'-), &c., sometimes even if a vowel intervenes, and particularly if the s occurs between two vowels, as in besom (bē'-zŭm), na'sal, desire', desīr'ous, &c.[49]; also (except in this, thus, us, gas, yes, before noticed), when it is single and final in monosyllables, as his (hĭz), was, trees, eyes (īz), &c., and when it forms an additional syllable with e before it, in the plurals of substantives, [43] Also refer to Sections 2, 5; and pages 614, 650, 900, &c.

[44] Absolve, and its formatives, which have the s flat, are the chief exceptions.

[45] Except in dissolve and possess, with their 'compounds', dessert, hussar, hussy, scissors, rescis'ory, missel (mĭz'l), miss'eldine, miss'eltoe (for 'mistletoe'), and, perhaps, two or three others, in which the s is flat, like z.

[46] The dis- in dis'mal is not a 'preposition', and therefore, does not come under the Rule.

[47] But not in resign (to give up); nor in resound (to echo, &c.).

[48] Preside was formerly pronounced with the s sharp, and is so marked by Walker; reside always has the s flat, according to the Rule.

[49] Design and desist have the s sharp; resist, like reside, owing to the tendency of re-, noticed in the Text, preserves the s flat, and is regular.

and the third person singular of verbs, whether the 'singular' and 'first persons' have the s sharp or not, as in ass'es, box'es, cag'es, hous'es, prices (prīs'-ĕz), pris'es, &c.[50]; and in all plurals and the inflections of verbs in which the singular ends in a vowel, or in a vowel followed by e mute, w, or y, as comm'as, op'eras, al'oes (-ōz), du*e*s, shoes (shōōz), news, views, rays, ways, betrays', &c.; also commonly when occurring between a vowel or diphthong (particularly i, e, ou, ū), and mute e final, especially at the end of verbs, to distinguish them from substantives and adjectives of corresponding forms, as grease (grēz; v.), rise (rīz), premise', close, rose (s.), house (howz; v.), mouse, abuse', amuse', diffuse', peruse', use (v.), &c.

S is flat, like z, in the 'inseparable preposition' dis- when it is not under the accent, and the following syllable having the accent begins with or consists of a 'vowel', a 'liquid', or a 'flat consonant'; as in disa'ble (dĭz-)[51], disease' (dĭz-ēz'), disor'der, disdain', dislike', dislodge', dismay', dismem'ber, dismat'uralise, disrel'ish, disrobe', disband', disdain', disgrace', disval'ue, &c.[52]

S has also (subject to the exceptions noticed above) almost always the sound of z after the 'preposition' or prepositive syllable re-, particularly when followed by a vowel; as in reem'ble (-ēm'-), resent' (-zĕnt'), reserve', resign' (to give or yield up, to submit)[53], resil'ience, res'in (rĕz'-), resolve' (to analyse, to solve, to clear of doubt)[53], resound' (to echo, to celebrate)[53], result', resume', resump'tion, &c. It is soft, according to the Rule (see above), in -asm, -ism, -osm, -ysm; and also, sometimes, in other 'terminations'[54].

S before e or i and another vowel or vowels, and before u, assumes the sound of 'zh' when it follows the accent, either primary or secondary, and is preceded by a 'liquid' or another s, and usually, as with c, with more or less, or often entire absorption of the e or i in utterance, as in nausea'tion (-she-ā'-), nau'seate (-sh'āte), nau'seous (-sh'ŭs), expul'sion (-shŭn), dimen'sion, rever'sion, pas''sion (păsh'-ŭn)[55], mis''sion (mĭsh'-ŭn)[56], sen'sure (-sh'ōōr), sen'sual (-sh'ōō-ăl), pres''sure (prĕsh'-ūre), &c.[56]

S, when preceded by an accented vowel or vowel-digraph, and followed by e or i and another vowel or vowels, or by u, assumes the sound of 'zh', as in eva'sion (-shūn), cohe'sion, deci''sion (-sĭzh'-ŭn), intru'sion (-zhūn), vision (vĭzh'-ŭn), ex'urine (ĕzh'-ū-), mĕas'ure (mĕzh'-), plĕas'ure (plĕzh'-), trĕas'ure, vi''sual (vĭzh'-), u'sury (-zh'ōōr-e)[57], u'surer, &c.[58]

S has the sound of sh in the words sure (sh'ōōr) and sugar (shōōg'-ăr), and their 'formatives' and 'compounds' sure'ly, sure'ty, assure' (ă-sh'ōōr'), assur'ance, insure', insur'ance, sug'ary (shōōg'-), sug'ar-cane, &c., though under the accent.[59]

[50] See Sections 13, 24; and their Notes.

[51] But in disabil'ity the s is sharp, being under the secondary accent. So of disunite', and many other words. (See below.)

[52] Mr Walker adds disuse; but here, as well as in disuniform, disunite, disunity, and disunion, owing to the peculiar nature of ū, the s is now always preserved sharp by polite speakers, and is correctly so marked by Mr Smart.

[53] But not in resign, resound, resolve (to sign, sound, or solve again), &c., as before noticed.

[54] See Section 45.

[55] 'Though the ss in passion, mission, &c., belong to separate' (written) 'syllables, yet the accent presses the first (s) into the same aspiration as the last, and they are both pronounced with the same aspirated hiss as if they were but one s'. (Walker.)

[56] See Sections 2, 23, 36, &c.; also Notes 57-8 (below).

[57] But not in usurious (-zūr'-), &c., owing to the influence of the accent.

[58] A'sia (-sh'ă), magna'sia, magna'sian, magna'sium, and a few other words, have the s 'aspirated' and 'sharp', though, according to analogy, it should be flat. Arte'sian (-zh'ăn), mangane'sian, mangane'sium, &c., are regular, but are nearly as often heard with the s flat and unaspirated; thus, ăr-tēz'-yăn, măng-gă-nēz'-yăn, &c. See Section 28, and Note 59 (below).

[59] These words may be regarded as irregular; but this irregularity being sanctioned by long usage, has now become a 'part and parcel' of our language, as far as these words only are concerned. Mr Sheridan, from inattention to analogy, fell into the important error of aspirating the s in the words suicide (shōō'-), presume (-zhōōm'), resume, &c., but, fortunately, without imitators beyond the ranks of the illiterate and affected. (v. su.)

S is silent in aisle (īle), isle, is'land (ī'-), demesne' (-mānz'), puisne (pū'-ne), vis'count (vī'-); and at the end of French words generally, as corps (kōrs), pas (pä), sous (sōō), vis-à-vis (vīz-ă'-vē'), &c.[60]

Sh.

(See Sections 2, 5, 35; also page 650.)

36. The usual and proper sound of this letter is that heard in *t*ake, la*t*e, ma*t*, *t*empter, &c., being the sharp articulation of which d is the corresponding 'flat' one.

T, before i and another vowel or vowels, when it follows the accent either primary or secondary, and is not immediately preceded by s[61], like c and s in the same position, becomes aspirated, and assumes the sound of sh, as in nego'*t*iable (-sh'ăbl), nego'*t*iate (-sh'āte), pa'*t*ient (-sh'ĕnt), pa'*t*ience (-shĕnse), propī''*t*iate (-pīsh'-e-āte), sa'*t*iate (-sh'āte)[62], propī''*t*ious (-pīsh'-'ŭs), mo'*t*ion (-shūn), negoćia'*t*ion (-she-ā'-shŭn)[63], salva'*t*ion, satia'*t*ion (-she-ā'-shūn), &c.[64]

T is silent in chestnut (chĕs'-), Christmas (krĭs'-), *h*ostler (ŏs'-), mis'*t*letoe (mĭs'l-to), mor*t*gage (mor'-), and ost'ler; and, colloquially, in bankrup*t*'cy, cur'ran*t*, cur'ran*t*s, and a few others; also after s when followed by e mute and n final, or by -el or -le final with the e mute, as in chā*st*en (chās'n), fa*st*en (fās'n), ca*st*le (käs'l), ne*st*le (nĕs'l), thi*st*le (thĭs'l), thro*st*le (thrŏs'l), rus*t*le (rŭs'l), whi*st*le (hwĭs'l), &c.[65]; and in often (ŏf'n), soften (sŏf'n), and their 'formatives'.[66]

It is also silent, when initial before m or n, in classical proper names[67], and almost always so at the end of French words[68].

[60] See Section 99, &c.

[61] When the t is preceded by s accented, it retains its own sound pure, as in bes*t*'ial (bĕst'-yăl), celes*t*'ial, Chris*t*'ian (krĭst'-yăn), diges*t*'ion (-jĕst'-yŭn), ques*t*'ion, &c. So also in 'formatives', which in all cases follow their 'simples'; as pi*t*'ies (pĭt'-ĭz), pi*t*'ied (-ĭd), from pity; twen'*t*ieth (-te-ĕth), from twenty; mīght'ier, from mighty; &c. See Sections 14, 24, &c.; also Note 64 (below).

[62] But sati'*e*ty, and all other words in which ti is under the accent, preserve the t pure. The same applies to c and s in ce, ci, se, si, &c., when similarly circumstanced.

[63] In this word, and in a few similar ones, in which two aspirates would occur, some polite speakers merely soften the first t into s, without aspirating it; but this is much less frequently done with t than with c, or even s, when similarly situated, although the practice has the sanction of Mr Knowles and a few other writers. Satiation is always heard with both t's aspirated, on account of the preceding s. See Section 28, &c.

[64] Mr Walker sounds the t as tsh (i. e., ch), in nature (nā'-chūre), pasture, virtue, and other like words in which tu occurs after the accent—a practice which he also extended to te and ti in certain words, as pit'eous (pĭtch'-e-ŭs), fron'tier, celes'tial, admis'tion, &c.; but this pronunciation, though still frequently heard among ordinary speakers (who, in four cases out of five, follow Walker, right or wrong), is scrupulously avoided by the educated and polite. Mr Sheridan extended this ch-ing of tu even to words in which these letters occur in monosyllables and under the accent, as in tune, tu'tor, &c., which he pronounced *ch*oon (i. e., *ch*ōōne), *ch*oo'tar, &c.; also to te and ti; barbarisms of pronunciation which never became general, and which have now long since fallen into entire disuse.

[65] But not in pestle (pĕs'il), nor in the obsolete words burst'en and burst'enness.

[66] On these terminations, see Section 45.

[67] But in classical and geographical words, the t before l being pronounceable, is always heard.

[68] See Section 99.

Th.

This digraph has two distinct elementary sounds—the one, thin or sharp, heard in thing, think, theatre, breath, &c., and represented in the 'notation' of this Dictionary by th; the other flat and semi-vocal, heard in thee, thine, heathen, &c., and represented by the phonotype th[69].

In asth'ma (ăst'-mă), phthis'ic (tĭz'-), phthis'ical[69a], Thames (tĕmz), Thomas (tŏm'-ăs), thyme, and perhaps one or two others, and in all the continental European languages except Greek, it is pronounced as simple t. In twelfth'tide[69b], as heard colloquially, it is usually silent.

37. Th is sharp (= th) at the beginning of words, except in than, that, the, thee, their, them, then, thence, there, these, they, thine, this, thither, those, thou, though, thus, thy, and their 'compounds'; also at the end of words, except in booth, mouth (v.), path (v.— ŕ)[70], smooth (a., s., v.), sooth (a., s.; pleasing, delightful; sweetness, kindness)[71], with[72], wreath (v.)[73], the old orthographies clŭth (s.), lōath (v.), sŏth (v.), unclōth' (v.)[73], and two or three others.[74]

Th is also usually sharp in the middle of words when it either precedes or follows a consonant, or precedes w, as in athwart', eth'nical, or'thodox, pan'ther, philan'thropy, &c., but not in breth'ren, burth'en, far'ther, far'thing, far'thingale, fur'ther, nor'therly, nor'thern, north'ing, wor'thy, and a few others, in which it is flat; and generally (except in words purely English[75]) when it occurs between two vowels, particularly in words from the learned languages, as am'eth'yst, antip'athy, ap'athy, apoth'ecary, a'theist, Ath'ens, authen'tic, au'thor, author'ity, cathar'tic, cath'olic, e'ther, eth'ics, leth'argy, Le'the, lethe'an, levi'athan, mathemat'ics, meth'od, pathet'ic, pleth'ora, plethŏr'ic, sym'pathy, &c.

38. Th, between two vowels, in words purely English, is generally soft (= th), as in fa'ther, ēi'ther (ē'-), fēath'er, gath'er, hēa'then (hē'-thn), hith'er, moth'er, moth'ery, nēi'ther (nē'-), poth'er, thith'er (thĭth'-), togeth'er, wēath'er, weth'er, wheth'er (hwĕth'-), whith'er (hwith'-), with'er, and their 'formatives', &c.[76]; and at the end of words, particularly verbs, when followed by e mute, as in breathe, clothe, sheathe, &c.; and in booth (s.), mouth (v.), smooth (a., s., v.), sooth (in certain senses), with (when not compounded and final), wreath (v.), and a few others noticed in Section 37, though without the final e; also in the plurals of some words having final th 'sharp' in the singular, particularly after the Italian a (ă), as baths (bathz), paths, &c.[77]

Th is also soft, though initial, in than, that, the, and the other words enumerated at the commencement of Section 37 (q. v.).

[69] Sections 2, 5; also page 767.

[69a] But it is now always retained pure, by careful speakers, in phthisic (thĭz'-); often, however, still heard colloquially tĭz'-ĭk, as marked by Smart and Walker.

[69b] Twĕlf for twelfth is, in other cases, a decided vulgarism.

[70] Now more generally pronounced, like the substantive, with the th sharp, but frequently heard with the th soft or flat, and so marked by Webster. Its third person singular is, however, always heard with the th flat, like the plural of the substantive.

[71] But sooth (a., s.; true, faithful; truth, faith, &c.), usually has the th sharp. As a verb, this word is now always written soothe, and follows the general rule. (See below.)

[72] But forthwith' and herewith' have the th sharp.

[73] Now usually written wreathe, clothe, loathe, seethe, unclothe.

[74] Beneath' and underneath' are heard with the th both sharp and flat, but now more usually with the former, though marked with the flat th by K., Sh., Wa., and We.

[75] See Section 38 (below).

[76] For the sound of th, in this position, in other classes of words, see Section 37 (above).

[77] But truths should always have the th sharp, though often heard colloquially otherwise.

(See page 842, and Sections 2, 5.[78])

W.

39. W, at the beginning of a word or syllable, or after an initial consonant, is commonly, and, perhaps, conveniently regarded as a consonant, though in reality a 'vowel', equivalent to o͝o or o͞o, from which it differs merely in its written form, as already noticed, and as heard in wa'ter (o͝o'-tĕr), win (o͝oĭn), beware' (-o͝oâre'), swoon (so͝o͞on), swung (so͝oŭng), &c.[79]

W, when initial in a word or syllable, before r (wr-) is always silent, as in wrap (răp), wreck, wrong, awry' (ă-rī'), &c.; and when occurring before h (wh-) it changes places with that letter, as in why (hwī), when (hwĕn), which (hwĭtch), &c.[80] It is silent in the words an'swer (ăn'-sĕr), sword (sôrd)[81], to'ward or to'wards (ad., pr.)[82], and two (to͞o).

W, when medial or final, is either silent, though generally significant, as in draw, law, flo͞w, gro͞wn, kno͞w, &c.; or, like u, it forms a diphthong with the previous vowel, as in new (nū), how, town, tow'el, &c.[83]

X.

40. The regular sound of this letter (= ks)[84] is that which it always bears at the end of words, as in box, mix, vex, perplex; and when it ends a syllable with either the primary or secondary accent on it, as in ex'ercise, ex'cellence, exhibi''tion, and even when the accent is on the following syllable, provided this begins with a 'consonant', as in excuse', expense', exten'sive, &c.; also, irrespective of accent or position, in compounds of which the 'simple' ends in x sharp, as fixa'tion, prox-im'ity, vexa'tious, &c.[85]; but, under other conditions, it is subject to similar changes from position as the other consonants, passing into the flat sound gz or z, and, in some cases, its second element becomes aspirated, as noticed below.

X, in the inseparable preposition ex-, has its flat or soft sound (= gz) when not under the accent, either primary or secondary, and the following syllable having the accent, begins with any vowel except long u (ū), or with h, as in anxi'ety (ăng-zī'-), exalt' (ĕgz-ălt'), exam'ple (ĕgz-), exist' (ĕgz-ĭst'), uxō'rious (ŭg-zō'rē-), exhib'it (ĕgz-hĭb'-), exhume' (ĕgz-hūm'), &c.[86]; also, though under the accent, in

[78] 'If ever silent, it is in the word twelvemonth', which, 'in colloquial pronunciation', is pronounced 'as if written twĕl'mŭnth'. (Walker.)

[79] See page 864; also Sections 2, 5, with their Notes.

[80] For the exceptions, see Section 31.

[81] Dr Webster retains the w in this word; but this is an Americanism.

[82] In to'ward (a.), to'wardly, to'wardliness, and to'wardness, the w is now always preserved by careful speakers. Mr Smart omits the w in toward and towards, whether used as a, ad., or pr.

[83] See Sections 8, 11, 16, 18, 23–4, &c.

[84] Usually called 'sharp x'.

[85] Doxol'ogy, a 'simple' in English, though in reality an anglicised Greek compound, exhibits the same tendency, and with doxolō''gical, doxol'ogize, &c., preserve the x sharp. So also of several other words.

[86] Luxū'riant (lŭg-zūre'-e-ănt), luxū'riate, and luxū'rious, with their 'formatives', now always have the x soft; whilst in luxury (lŭks'-ū-), owing to the influence of the accent, it is as constantly preserved sharp, and sometimes, but only colloquially, pronounced lŭk'-sh'o͝o-re (—S.) or lŭk'-shū-re (—Wa.). Mr Sheridan's 'notation' lŭg-zho͝o'-re-ănt, lŭg-zho͝o'-re-ŭs, &c., is contrary to both analogy and polite usage.

Digitized by Google

a very few 'compounds' from words in which the x is soft, as ex'emplary (ĕgz'-ĕm-), and its 'formatives'.[87]

The second element of x, like simple 's' when it follows the accent and precedes either e or i and another vowel, assumes the sound of zh, and under precisely similar conditions to those which affect that letter, as in an"xious (ăng'-shŭs), an"xiously, &c.[88]; also, sometimes, before u when it follows the accent, as in the colloquial pronunciation of luxʹury (lŭk'-shʹo͝o-), already referred to.[89]

At the beginning of words x has the sound of z, as in xan'thic (zăn'-), Xen'ophon, xylog'raphy, &c.

It is generally silent at the end of French words, but beaux[90] (pl.), is pronounced bōz.

Y.

41. This letter when initial in words and syllables, as in yarn, yes, young, vine'yard, &c., is commonly, and perhaps conveniently, regarded as a 'consonant', though in reality a vowel or semi-consonant vowel, equivalent to ĕ or e, from which it differs merely in its written form[91].

42. Y, when medial in a syllable, has exactly the same sound as i would have in the same situation, as in bye (bī), rhyme (rīme), thyme, am'ethyst (-thĭst), myr'tle, panegyr'ic, pyr'amid, syn'tax, syr'tem, &c.[92]

43. Y, when final, in monosyllables, and in syllables under the accent, whether primary or secondary, has exactly the sound of long i (ī), as in by (bī), buy[93], cry, try, cy'der, mul'tiply, oc'cupy, reply', ty'rant, try'ing, &c.; but when final and unaccented in a word or syllable (except in the cases noticed above and below), has always the sound of either the 'alphabetic' or 'brief' e, as in cop'y (-e), du'ty (-te), fan'cy, lib'erty, qual'ity, van'ity, &c.

Y, preceded by f, at the end of verbs, is uniformly long, as in defy' (-fī'), jus'tify, qual'ify, &c.; and (except before the accent, as in substantives in -a'tion), this long sound is retained in the 'formatives' even when y is changed into i, as in jus'tifiable, qual'ified, &c.

The 'quantity' of y at the end of a syllable immediately preceding the accent, is subject to the same variety and uncertainty as that of i when similarly situated, and must be settled in a similar manner.[94]

Z.

44. Z, except in the cases noticed below, has one uniform sound, as heard in zeal, zone, buzz, maze, frōz'en, &c.

When this letter comes after the accent, either primary or secondary, and is followed by e or i and another vowel, or by ū, it assumes the sound of zh, as heard in gla'zier (-zh'ĕr), gra'zier (-zh'ĕr), a"zure (ăzh'-ūre), &c.[95]

Zh.

(See Sections 2, 5, 44; also page 900.)

[87] These are the only words in which x, under the accent, has uniformly its soft sound.
[88] But not in anx'iety, on account of the different position of the accent. See Section 35.
[89] See Note 86 (ante).
[90] 'Often' (—! sometimes) 'and better written beaus'. (Walker.)
[91] See Section 2; also page 896.
[92] See Sections 14–5.
[93] These last two words sound alike. See Sections 18, 24.

COMBINED CONSONANTS, GROUPED LETTERS, &c.

45. The following Table of 'Literal equivalents', with the accompanying Notes, contains, in a condensed form, much useful information in addition to or in extension of the previous Sections, and will furnish, in many instances, a key to the pronunciation of whole classes of words, and obviate the necessity of reference to them individually in the Dictionary[1]:—

bi-. See Section 14.
-ble = bl or b'l, as in a'ble (ā'bl), blām'ble, del'ble, fee'ble, cred'ible, el'ig*ible*, ris'ible, dotib'le, &c.; and when this termination is preceded by any unaccented vowel (except u), the vowel is either 'short' or 'brief', as may be seen in the above examples.
-bt = t, as in debt (dĕt), debt'or, redoubt', &c.; and in the word subtle (sŭt'l), and its 'formatives', though the letters apparently occur in separate syllables[2].
-ce- (after the accent). See Section 28.
-cele = sēle, as in bron"cho*cēle*, vär'ico*cēle*, and other like pathological and medical terms.
ch (in classical and scientific words). See Sections 29, 99.
chi-. See Section 14.
-chre = kĕr. See -re.
-ci- (after the accent). See Section 28.
-city = -s'-It-e, as in verä"city (-rās'-), publĭ"city (-lĭs'-), &c.
-ckle, -cle = -k'l, as in fick'le (fĭk'l), mĭr'acle (-ăkl), &c. See -le (below).
col-, com-, con-, cor-. See Section 17.
-cre. See -re.
-ction = -k'-shŭn, as in connec'tion.[3]
-dge = j, as in he*dge*, &c. di-. See Section 14.
dis-. See Section 35.

-ed = d or t, in all preterites, participles, and participial adjectives (subject only to the exceptions noticed above), the e being suppressed, and the d changed to t, when necessary for union with the preceding consonant in utterance, as explained in Section 13.

-el = ĕl, when unaccented and final, in all words except the following—barb'el (barb'l), be'tel (-tl), bev'el (colloq.; otherw., bev'ĕl), bes'el, chatt'el, chis'el (chĭz'l; vulg., to cheat[5]), dras'el, driv'el, eas'el (ēz'l), grov'el, ha'zel, mangel-wur'zel, mant'el, mant'*el*piece, mispick'el, miss'el (mĭz'l), miss'el-bird, miss'eldīne, miss'eltoe (mistletoe), muss'el (mŭs'l), na'vel, nous'el (nūz'l; for nozzle), noz'el (for nozzle), ous'el (ōōz'l), rav'el, riv'el, scov'el (skŭv'l), shek'el, shov'el (shŭv'l), shov'*el*ard (a bird), shov'*el*ler (do.), shriv'el, smiv'el, swin"gel, swiv'el, tass'el (but only so colloq. or vulg.), teas'el (tēz'l), togg'el, tou'sel (tow'zl), tress'el, unrav'el, wēa'sel (we'zl), wēav'el, wēe'zel, and, perhaps, three or four others colloquially.[6]

-en = ĕn, in wooll'en (-ĕn), wom'en (wĭm'-), flan'nel, sīr'en or sy"ren, sull'en, war'-ren, and (with the exception of a few 'verbals'; see below) in all other words in which it is unaccented, and follows a 'liquid'; also in some words contrary to the general Rule, when it is not preceded by a liquid, as as'pen (-pĕn), boun'den (a.; colloq., bown'dn—S., We.), chick'en, hy'phen, kitch'en, lăt'en (colloq., lăt'n), lĕav'en (colloq., lĕv'n—K., We.), Lent'en (—S.; more us., and always colloq., lĕnt'n; v. i.), mar'ten, mitt'en (somet. colloq., mĭt'n), mŷn'chen, pat'en, patt'en, plat'en, shipp'en (colloq., shĭp'n; a stable or cow-house), slov'en (colloq. or vulg., slŭv'n—K.), slov'enly, slov'enry, sudd'en, tick'en, twigg'en (colloq., twĭg'n—K., We.), wick'en, yew'en, and a few others.[6]

-ene, -enes. See Section 99.

-es. See Sections 13, 35, 99.

-esce = ĕs, as in acquiesce', &c.

-ette = ĕt', as in anisette', coquette', etiquette', gazette', &c., and at the end of French words generally.

-ften. See -en (ante), and -ten (below).

-ful = fōōl, as in beau'ti*ful*, hope'ful, &c. See Section 19.

-fy. See Section 43.

gh- (initial) = g hard, as in *gh*ost (gōst), *gh*astly, *gh*er'kin, &c.[8]

-gh- (medial). See -ght.

-gh (final). These letters, when final, are usually silent, as in hī*gh* (hī), nī*gh*, throu*gh* (thrōō), thor'ou*gh* (thŭr'-o), wei*gh* (wā), &c.; but sometimes in this position they have the sound of f, as in chou*gh* (chŭf), cou*gh* (kŏf), rou*gh* (rŭf), sou*gh* (sŭf), tou*gh* (tŭf), trou*gh* (trŏf), enou*gh*' (-nŭf'), lau*gh* (lăf), lau*gh*'ter, &c.; in a few words, as hou*gh* (hŏk), lou*gh* (lŏk), shou*gh* (shŏk), that of k; whilst in burg*h* (bŭrg); burg*h*'er, &c., the g alone is sounded[8].

-ght = t, as in fl*ght* (flīt), nī*ght*, au*ght* (āwt), cau*ght*, nau*ght*, bou*ght* (bāwt), fou*ght*, nou*ght*, ou*ght*, *w*rou*ght*, drou*ght* (drowt), the effect of the gh being usually to keep the preceding vowel or vowel-digraph long. The exceptions are senn'i*ght* (-ĭt), for 'sevennight', where the vowel is short; and drau*ght* (drăft), drau*ght*s (a game), in which the gh has the sound of f.[9]

-geon, -gion. See Sections 24, 30-2.

-gm = m, with the preceding vowel short, as in phle*gm* (flĕm), ap'othe*gm* (-thĕm), di'aphra*gm* (-frăm), păr'adi*gm* (-dĭm), &c.; but in compounds other than the 'common formatives' noticed under -gn (below), both letters are separately articulated, as diaphra*gm*at'ic (-frăg-măt'-), phle*g'm*onous, &c.

gn- (initial) = n, as in *gn*at (năt), *gn*aw, *gn*arl'ed, *gn*o'mon, &c.

-gn- (medial). See -gn (below).

-gn (final) = n, as in dei*gn* (dāne), fei*gn*, benī*gn*' (-nīne'), resī*gn*' (-zīne'), impre*gn*' (-prēne'), impū*gn*' (-pūne'), &c.; and in their 'formatives', as resī*gn*'ing, resī*gn*'edly, malī*gn*'er, benī*gn*'est, condī*gn*'ness, &c.[10]; but in every other compound or class of words in which these letters occur, the combination is broken up, and the g is articulated, whilst the n goes to the following

[7] The suppression of the e when it should be 'heard', and its preservation when it should be 'suppressed', in the terminations -ed, -el, -en, -il, -in, are errors which should be carefully avoided, as being now almost exclusively confined to the illiterate and vulgar. See Sections 13, 15.

[8] The use of h after the g in some of these words, as *gh*erkin, burg*h*er, &c., appears to be an orthographic expedient to shew that the g is hard, and in some others to shew that the preceding vowel or diphthong is long. See -ght.

[9] Drought was anciently, and is still vulgarly pronounced drowth; and is even written 'drouth' and 'drowth' by Milton. So also of height, spelled hēighth by Milton, and so pronounced by the vulgar. Both these words are now regular.

[10] It will be seen that the g here merely performs the office of indicating that the preceding vowel or vowel-digraph is long or open. For'eign (-ĭn), sov'ereign, and a few others, where gn occurs in a final unaccented syllable, do not come under the Rule. See Section 25; also gh, ght, and gm (above).

syllable, as in benig'nity (-nĭg'-), malig'nity, sig'nify, assigna'tion (-sĭg-nā'-), rec'ognise (-ŏg-), phȳsiog'nomy, &c.[11] gn (in foreign words). See Section 99.

-gue = g hard, as in cat'alogue (-lŏg), dem'agogue (-gŏg), fatigue' (-tēg'), rogue, and nearly all similar words, with their 'formatives'.[12]

-ice = ĭs, as in accom'plice (-plĭs), ben'efice, jus'tice, ŏff'ice (off'icer), and almost every other word, except cock'atrice (-trĭse), and sac'rifice (-flse[13]; s.), in which it is final and unaccented.[14]

-ide = ĭde, as in par'ricide, su'icide, &c.

-ide = īd. See Section 58.

-il = ĭl, as in cav'il, civ'il, coun'cil, pen'cil, &c.; but the i is suppressed in bev'il (bĕv'l), dev'il (dĕv'l), dev'ilish (dĕv'l-lsh), e'vil (ē'vl), weev'il (wē'vl), and, perhaps, two or three others.

-ile = īl, when unaccented, in all words except the following, in which the i is long:—an'tile, cam'omile, cham'omile, e'dile, ed'lopile, ex'ile (s., v.)[15], gen'tile[16], in'fantile, irrec'oncile, o'vile, part'ile, rec'oncile, se'ntile, and, perhaps, two or three others.[17]

-ime = ĭme, in pan'tomime; but the i is short in mar'itime.

-in = ĭn, as Lat'in, sat'in, &c.[18]; but the i is suppressed in ba'sin (ba'sn), cous'in (kŭz'n), rais'in (rā'sn), and two or three others.

-ine = īn, when unaccented, in all words except the following, in which the i is long:—an'serine, ar'boŭrvine, as'inine, avent'urine (-rēne), bell'uine (-ū-ĭne), bĕr'ylline (accor. to K. and S.), Bȳz'antine (s.)[19], cab'alline, cal'amine (accor. to K. and Wa.), cann'abine (a.)[20], capit'oline, ca'prine (a.)[21], căr'abine, car'bine, car'line (a., s.), car'mine, cel'andine, cer'vine, colu'brine, col'umbine, con"cubine, con'fine (s., v.; border, edge, &c.), Con'stantine[22], cor'vine, co'sine, coun'termine (s.), crȳs'talline, Cymbeline[22], eg'lantine, e'quine (-kwīne), er'rhine, es'urine (ĕzh'-), fe'line, fēr'ine, in'fantine[22], laur'entine, leg'aline, le'onine, lep'orine, met'alline, nem'aline, nerv'ine (accor. to K. and S.), o'vine, Paul'ine, par'oxine, pis'cine, por'cine, por'cupine, sacch'arine (as somet. heard, and as marked by K., Sh., and Wa.), sar'coline, sat'urnine, sec'undine, ser'pentine, Sȳb'ylline, staph'ylline, su'perfine, su'pine (s.—L. gram.), tur'pentine, vac'cine (accor. to S. and Wa.), Val'entine[22], val'entine, ves'perline, vī"cine (vīs'-), vul'pine (as somet. heard), and a few others.[24]

-ise = īs or ĭz, as in an'tise (-ĭs), fran'chise (-chĭz), mor'tise (-tĭs), trēat'ise (-ĭz), [11] Cognisable, cognisance, cognisant, recognisable, recognisance, &c., and physiognomy, physiognomist, &c., are often heard without the g; poignant, poignantly, poignancy, always so. See these words in the Dictionary.

[12] In tongue (tŭng), the ue is not merely silent, but leaves the ng with its natural ringing sound. See Sections 2, 24, 30.

[13] Sĭk'-so-flte—K., Sh., Wa., We.

[14] See Section 14.

[15] Exile' (s.) has also the i long, but the vowel is then accented.

[16] But gen'tilish, gen'tilism, gen'tilize, have the i short.

[17] Docile (s.), when accented on the first syllable (as is done by Mr Smart), also belongs to this list. Juvenile, mercantile, and puerile have the i marked long by Knowles and Worcester; and mercantile is also so marked by Mr Smart. See Note 24 (below).

[18] Not Lat'n, sat'n, &c., which are vulgarisms.

[19] Bȳz'antine (a.), with the i short.

[20] But cannabine (s.—chem.), has the i short.

[21] But camphrine (s.—chem.), has the i short.

[22] 'The proper names Valentine and Constantine seem strongly to incline' to the short sound of i; 'and on the stage Cymbeline has entirely adopted it'. (Walker.)

[23] In'fantine—S.

[24] There appears to be a strong tendency in the language to shorten the i in the unaccented terminations -ile, -ine, &c., and thus to render the pronunciation of words in which they occur more uniform.

On words from the French, terminating in -in and -ine, see Section 14.

and all other words (except the compounds of -wise; v. i.) which have th accent on the last syllable but one.[25]

-ise = ĭz*e*, in all, or nearly all words of this termination, which have the accent o the last syllable but two; and at the end of almost all verbs (except fran chĭse, -chĭz, and its comp.), whether under the accent or not; as in cat'echĭ (-kĭz*e*), en'terprĭse (s., v.), le'galĭse, baptĭse', chastĭse', com'promĭse (s., v. oth'erwise[25], &c.[26]

-ise = īz*e*, in all adjectives, as noticed under -se.

-ite = ĭt, as in compos'ĭte (-ĭt; a.), gran'ĭte, res'pĭte, and all other words (excep con'trĭte, cri'nĭte, fī'nĭte, mann'ĭte, o'phĭte, and gentile s. and a.; v. i which have the penultima accented; also in app'osĭte (-zĭt), com'posĭte (s. def'inĭte, ex'quĭsĭte, fa'vourĭte, hyp'ocrĭte, indef'inĭte, in'finĭte, opp'osĭt per'quisĭte, req'uisĭte, prereq'uisĭte, and a very few others, though wit the accent on the antepenultimate syllable. (See below.)

-ite = īt*e*, as in app'etīte, ex'pedīte, pär'asīte, sat'ellīte, theod'olīte, het'eroclīt quadrip'artīte, and (with the exceptions given in the last paragraph) i most other words which have the antepenultimate or pre-antepenultima accent; also in all substantives denoting race, sect, country, &c. (i. e 'gentiles'), as bed'lamīte, cosmop'olīte, Hit'tīte, Sam'nīte, Pu'seyīte, Whit fieldīte, &c.; and in the names of minerals, fossils, plants, and chemic bodies generally, as ac'onīte, cop'rolīte, hem'atīte, lig'nīte, mall'īte, pol'ychr īte, &c.[27]

-ity = ĭt-e or e-te, as in abil'ity, eter'nity, verā"city, &c.; and always with t accent on the immediately preceding consonant.

-itis = ī'-tĭs, as in bronchs'tis (-kī'-tĭs), phreni'tis, and other pathological an medical terms of a like formation.

-ive = ĭv, as in am'atĭve, defen'sive, plain'tĭve, pos'itĭve, remu'neratĭves, and (wi the exceptions noticed below) in all other words in which this terminatio is unaccented; also in the verbs give, līve[28], and their 'formatives', a the word līvé'long (a., s.).

-ive = īv*e*, in monosyllables (except gĭve, līve; v. su.), and in all final accent syllables, as strīve, deprīve', &c.; and in all gentile substantives a adjectives, whether accented or not, as Ar'gīve (Greek, or a Greek); also ar'chīve (now used only in the pl., ar'chīves[29]), though accented on t penultima, with their 'formatives', &c.

-ise = īz*e*, in all words, whether accented or not.[30] kn- = n, as in *kn*ack (năk), *kn*ell, *kn*ife, *kn*ock, *kn*uck'le, &c.

-ld = d, in co*uld* (kŏŏd), sho*uld* (shŏŏd), wo*uld* (wŏŏd).

-le = l or 'l, as in a'bl*e* (ā'bl), dūr'abl*e*, el'igībl*e*, an"cl*e*, nes'tl*e* (nĕs'l), rī'f pus'tūl*e*, puss'l*e*, spher'icl*e*, ti'tl*e*, ves'icl*e*, and all other English or anglicis words in which it is unaccented and final. See -ble, -ile, -ple, -stle, -t -uple, &c.

-lf = f, in cal*f* (kăf), hal*f* (hāf), and their 'formatives' and 'compounds'.

-lk = k, in bal*k* (bāwk), cha*lk* (chāwk), sta*lk*, wa*lk*, and other words in which follows a, which it lengthens and broadens; also in fōlk, yōlk; a perhaps, one or two others.[31]

[25] Sometimes colloquially, oth'erwĭse (-wĭz), as marked by Sheridan.
[26] See -se (below).
[27] See Sections 14, 58.
[28] But līve (a.), līve'ly (a.), līve'lihood (s.), and their 'formatives', are regular, with th long.
[29] But ar'chival and ar'chivist have the i either short or as brief e, though marked long Knowles and Smart.
[30] The obsolete 'verb enden'ise (-ĭz), having the accent on the second syllable, has th short'. (Walker.)

-nc, -nce, -nch- (in words from the learned languages), -nk, -nq, -nque = ngk, as in blanc (blängk), blank, rank, branch'iate (brängk'-), branch'ise, banq'uet, bank, think, blink'er, and monosyllables generally, and most other words in which these consonant-combinations occur under the accent[40].

-ng = ng, a digraph which, at the end of words and syllables, represents the peculiar nasal elementary sound heard in clang, fang, length, strength, bring, king, song, prolong', hung, strung, among', &c.; in all of which it may be observed that the sound of the ng concludes that of the word. The same occurs in the 'common formatives' of verbs and adjectives in -ng, as bring'ing, hanged, sing'er, string'y, and all others (with the three exceptions named below), in which merely the sound of -ing, -ed, -er, -y (e), &c., is added to the 'simple'; but in all 'simples' in which ng is not final, a perfect sound of g is organically interposed between the ng and the following letter in utterance, as heard in an''ger (ăng'-gŭr), an''gle (ăng'-gl), an''guish (ăng'-gwĭsh), distin''guish, fin''ger (fing'-gŭr), hun''ger, lin''ger, un''guent (ŭng'-gwĕnt), &c.; also in the 'comparatives' and 'superlatives'

[32] But not in pāl'mar (a.), pāl'mary (a.; principal, capital), pāl'mate, pāl'mated, pāl'metto, pāl'mic, pālmif'erous, pal'mine, pāl'miped, pal'mister, pal'mistry, in which, from their different derivation, the l is always sounded, and the a is short.

[33] But not in psălmod'ic (săl-), psăl'modist, psăl'mody, psălmog'raphy, psălmog'rapher, psălmog'raphist, which retain the l, as noticed in Note 8, page xxi.

[34] But not in sălf'mo, L., sălf'monoid, &c.

[37] In rhom'bic, rhombohe'dral, rhombohe'dron, rhom'boid, rhom'bus, &c., the m and b fall into separate syllables.

[38] In climb, comb, tomb, the b, though silent, serves to lengthen the preceding vowel; an office which probably it originally performed in other like words.

[39] The m and n are separately heard in autum'nal (-năl), autum'nity, condem'nable, condem'nation, condem'natory, contem'ning and contem'ner (in formal discourse), hym'ning and hym'ned (in solemn disc.), lim'ning (act or art), sol'emnise, and solem'nity; but not in the other 'formatives' of the words referred to. See Note 34, page l.

[40] This change of n into 'ng', before k, or the sound of k, usually occurs even when the n ends one syllable, and the c begins the following one, provided the former is accented, as in an''cient (ăng'-kēnt), con''course, con''gress, &c.; but when the accent falls on the next syllable, the n, in all cases, retains its proper sound, as in concav'ity (kŏn-), conca'vous, concur', concur'rence, &c. See -ng.

[41] Walker.

[42] A common error of speech is to drop the g in the final unaccented -ng of the 'formatives' of words ending with these letters; and to say bring′in, fling′in, sing′in, &c., for bring′ing, fling′ing, sing′ing, &c. In Mr Walker's time, judging by his statements, this was the usual, though not the universal practice; but, at the present day, this omission, or rather substitution, is carefully avoided by all correct and polite speakers. 'It is a good rule with respect to pronunciation, to adhere to the written words, unless custom has clearly decided otherwise'; and hence 'it does not seem proper to adopt this innovation'. (L. Murray.)

The omission of the g, when the 'simple' does not end in -ng, as read′in, sinn′in, speak′in, writ′in, &c., for read′ing, sinn′ing, &c., is now wholly confined to the vulgar.

A like substitution, that of the sound of n, for ng, in the middle of words, is common in some parts of the West of England, particularly in the word kingdom, which even as a proper name, is usually pronounced kin′-dŭm; nor is this corruption confined to the vulgar, but is common among nearly all classes. Another corruption of -ng is its undue prolongation, and, as it were, partial repetition in the nose, often with the addition of an obscure sound of ŏ or ŭ; as long′-ge or long′-gĕh for long, sing′-gĕh for sing, &c. This is not merely a provincialism, but is also a decided vulgarism.

[43] Not awf, or orf, cawf′ee or corf′ee, awf′icer or orf′icer, &c., which are common, but unpardonable vulgarisms.

[44] But fill′conet preserves the o pure, with the l sounded, and the a short.

[45] Glŭt′-ŭn-ĭze, glŭt′-ŭn-ŭs, glŭt′-ŭn-e—Wa.

[46] But not in masŏn′ic, owing to the effect of accent.

[47] Fastidiously accurate speakers, as observed by Mr Walker, sometimes struggle to preserve the o, either as obscure ŏ, or ŭ, in the name of our great epic poet Milton, and a few other proper names.

[48] Parsonage, in formal discourse, is generally heard with the o as ŭ; parson′ic, owing to the influence of the accent, preserves the ŏ pure.

[49] See Section 17.

[50] But per′sonable, per′sonage, per′sonal, per′sonalise, per′sonalty, per′sonate, per′sonise, with their 'formatives', always have the o sounded as obscure ŭ. Some speakers, in formal discourse, also pronounce person in this manner, but the practice is far from general among the educated.

[51] Often heard, colloquially, with the o suppressed, and so marked by Wa. and We. See page 874.

III. Accent—primary and secondary, Quantity, Accentual marks, &c.[1]

46. Accent, in English, is the tone or stress laid on a vowel or syllable in a word; just as 'emphasis' is the 'stress' used to distinguish the more significant word or words in a clause or sentence.[2]

The obvious tendency of accent is to preserve the sounds of the letters distinct, pure, and uniform; whilst its absence, and the relaxation or feebleness of the organs consequent on its production, as naturally cause the sounds of the letters which precede or succeed it, to suffer in distinctness, and often, in the latter case, to sink into others of easier pronunciation or utterance. This tendency of the accent is most conspicuous in the vowels; but some of the consonants are no less altered in their sound by the position of the accent, than the vowels; and, in many cases, even groups of letters are also so affected. Examples of these changes, and of the powers of the letters liable to them, will be found in the preceding Sections.

Every monosyllable is, by its very nature, accented; and every word of two or more syllables, has one syllable clearly and distinctly accented, and without which accentuation it cannot be correctly uttered. But trisyllables and polysyllables are commonly liable to have more than one syllable accented; but in these cases, the stress laid on the syllables so affected differs in degree. Thus it will be observed, that the stress of the voice is laid upon the first and third syllables of 'as'pira'tion', 'glad'ia'tor', and 'rep'artee'', and on the first and fourth of 'ar'teriot'omy' and 'hyp'ochondri'acal'. The former accent in the first, third, and fourth of these words, and the latter in the second, is called the SECONDARY ACCENT, because it is less forcible than that on the other accented syllable, on which we dwell longer, and give greater distinctness to, and which is, therefore, called the PRINCIPAL or PRIMARY ACCENT; and the syllable on which this latter falls, is the only one

[67] See -ine (above).
[66] But lithophyte, lithophyllous (-o-lŭs), and neophyte, have the y short (= ĭ).

[1] See Preface.
[2] It may be here useful to remark, that though 'emphasis' is used to distinguish words, as opposed to 'accent' which relates to syllables, it is chiefly, if not wholly, the accented syllable, or syllables, of an emphasised word, which is, or are, affected by verbal stress or emphasis. Indeed, in English, accent and emphasis differ chiefly in degree—not in nature. Of these facts the reader had better satisfy himself by oral experiment.

alluded to in speaking of the accented syllables of words. In uttering the words singly, both accents are always heard; but, in discourse, the 'secondary accent' is sometimes omitted or slighted without impropriety. The greatest care must, however, be taken in the use of the secondary accent, to lay it upon the right syllable; its place in words being fixed with as much certainty as that of the primary or principal accent itself, whilst its effect upon the sounds of certain consonants and vowels, whether it be used, or not used, is, in general, precisely similar, as noticed in the previous Sections.

The tendency of the secondary accent is to shorten all the vowels (except u) on which it falls, unless they are followed by ia, or a similar vowel-combination; as in dĕgrada'tion from degrade', dĕmonstra'tion from demon'strate, prŏfana'tion from profane', rĕpara'tion from repair', &c.; but not in dēvia'tion, mēdiatōr'ial, &c. for the reason just given. In rătiŏ"cinate (răsh-e-ōs'-), rătiŏcina'tion, rătiŏ"cinative, and a few others, the secondary accent, however, exerts its full shortening power.

QUANTITY, as far as is connected with the pronunciation of single words, is the time which a letter or syllable takes in utterance.

A vowel or syllable is 'LONG' when the accent is on the vowel, or the vowel is open by position; as in mē'tre, mu'sic, bale, mate, regale', matēr'ial, pōr'ous, vōca'tion, edūca'tion, reg'ular, &c.

A vowel or syllable is 'SHORT' when the accent is on the consonant, or, in unaccented syllables, when the vowel is combined with or 'stopped' by a 'mute' as in bonn'et, hab'it, matt'er, pat'ronage, mat, plă"cid, com'pass, suspect'ing, &c. but when the consonant is a 'semivowel', particularly r, the time of the syllable is sometimes protracted, and the vowel is not strictly 'short' or 'stopped', as with the other consonants.[5]

The MARKS or SIGNS by which Accent and Quantity are indicated, are—(′), placed by the side of a letter, shewing that the preceding letter or syllable is accented; as mo'tive, rem'edy, repeat', &c.

(″)[4], shewing that the preceding vowel or syllable coalesces with the following consonant, forming one accented spoken syllable; as coura″geous, distin″guish, mă″cerate, nă″tional, &c.[5]

(¯)[6], placed over the vowel, shewing that it is long; as māte, ēdīle, īdēa, vīvăcious, &c.

(˘)[7], placed over the vowel, shewing that it is short; as măt, ĕdĭble, fĕminĭne, rĕpărtee', &c.

(′)[8], placed over the vowel, shewing that the syllable in which it occurs, which it forms, is accented, commonly without reference to the 'quantity' of the vowel; as fáncy, fávorite, lóvely, &c.; but sometimes it is used to distinguish short accented syllable, as noticed below.

[5] See Sections 2, 7, 9, &c., with their Notes.

[4] Commonly called the 'double accent'.

[5] This sign is unavoidably used after both long and short vowels, in the 'title words' of the 'vocabulary' of this Dictionary, in which marks of quantity are inadmissible, but only when the same word or its leading portion has been just previously respelled for pronunciation. In other cases (chiefly in 'formatives'), this sign has been used, when a different mode of accentuation would place soft c or g in danger of appearing hard, as in lă″cerated, full″ginous, &c. when the vowel is long—artĕ″sian, courā″geous; but when there is no danger of this mistake, and the vowel is long, more usually thus—hyperbōr'ean, matēr'ial, &c.

When placed between n and g, the double accent shews that the g is, as it were, drawn back to the previous syllable, forming with the n the elementary sound represented by ng, whilst it is also retained and articulated, with its proper hard sound, in the following syllable in full 'notation' expressed by -ng-g-, as in fin″ger. See Section 45.—

(`)[9], placed over the vowel, is sometimes used to shew that it is both long and accented; as lìvely, rival, connivance, &c. In Latin, it is used to distinguish adverbs and certain prepositions, without reference to stress or accent; as malè (ad.), suavitèr (ad.) vulgò (ad.), à (pr.), è (pr.), &c.

(ˆ)[10], occurring chiefly in classical and French words. In Latin, it either denotes a contraction, or distinguishes the genitive or ablative case, without reference to stress or accent, the vowel over which it is placed being usually long; as adîsse (for adivisse), dîxti (for dixisti), musâ, rosâ, virûm, &c.[11]

(¨)[12], placed over one of two vowels, shewing that they are to be pronounced separately; as aërial, orthoëpy, &c.

(¸)[13], placed under the letter c, chiefly in French words, to shew that it has its soft sound (= s), though hard by position; as in façade, Français, &c.

IV. Orthogràphy—Participles and other Formatives, Words in respect of which usage differs, &c.

47.[1] * * * *

48. Some words retain their terminations unaltered in composition and derivation, whilst others double or drop their final letter, or change it for another of corresponding character. This usually occurs according to the following Rules:—

Monosyllables and words accented on the last syllable, ending in a single consonant preceded by a single vowel, or by qu followed by a single vowel, usually double their final consonant when they take another syllable beginning with a vowel in declension, inflection, or derivation, particularly in participles, verbal substantives, and the other 'common formatives': thus, bet becomes bet'ting, bet'ted; blot, blot'ting, blot'ted, blot'ter; abet', abet'tor; begin', begin'ning, begin'ner; commit', commit'ting, commit'ted, commit'table, commit'tal; defer', defer'ring; regret', regret'ting, regret'ted; remit', remit'tance, remit'ted; sin, sin'ner; swab, swab'bing, swab'bed[2]; thin, thin'ner, thin'nest; wit, wit'ty; writ, writ'ten; acquit', acquit'ting, acquit'ted, &c.; and this doubling of the final consonant in 'formatives' and allied words, occurs even when the accent is shifted, as in excel', ex'cel'lence, ex'cel'lent,[3] &c.

The chief exceptions are with x final, and the s in 'gas', which are never doubled in the 'formatives' or derivatives, as fix, fix'ing, fix'ed; wax, wax'en; gas, gas'eous, gas'ify, &c.

But if a diphthong or a vowel-digraph precedes the final consonant (unless [9] Called the 'grave accent'.

In classical quotations (often), and in certain English dictionaries and lexicons, in which, following classical authority, the accent is marked only on the vowels, the 'acute accent' is used to mark a short accented syllable, as abĕttor, and the 'grave accent' a long one, as crisis, diorama; whilst in English dictionaries generally, prior to that of Mr Sheridan, the practice was to place the simple accentual mark (') over, or rather, beside the vowel of the accented syllable, as aba'ndon, deri'sive, irrespective of the 'quantity' of the vowel, leaving the reader to guess, if he were ignorant of the subject, whether it is long or short. This practice is still, unfortunately, continued in many of our standard technical dictionaries.

[10] Called the 'circumflex'. In Greek, its form is either (ˆ) or (˜).

[11] The last three accentual marks (` ˆ ¨), as employed in French, denote a difference in the pronunciation of the vowels, irrespective of accent, in the common sense of the word; the modifications of the vowel sounds, particularly of e, not being all of them expressed by distinct letters in that language, as in pavé, mètre, tête, château, dépôt, &c. See Section 99.

[12] Called 'diær'esis'. It is placed over the former of two distinct vowels only when it is necessary to shew that the latter one is long. In other cases, and indeed usually in nearly all cases, over the latter vowel.

[13] Called a 'cedil'la'.

[1] The omission of this Section is explained in the Preface (q. v.).

[2] W is here, for convenience' sake (though always a vowel), regarded as a consonant, in compliance with popular opinion, and the common school grammars. See Sections 2, 39.

[3] Primarily from the Latin excellens, from excello.

the former vowel is u, and immediately follows q), or if the ACCENT is on the PENULTIMATE or any preceding syllable, the consonant usually remains SINGLE, as fail, fail*ing*, fail*ed*; load, load*ing*, load*ed*; offer, offer*ing*, offer*ed*, offer*able*; repeat', repeat*ing*; toil, toil*ing*; maid, maid*en*; &c.

The exceptions occur chiefly in words in which a fear of the last vowel of the 'simple' being pronounced long in the 'derivatives' and 'formatives,' has induced printers, and, after them, writers, to double the final consonant, contrary to the Rule. Hence, in respect to words ending in l, p, and t more especially, usage is not settled. In many of them these letters are generally, though, perhaps, unnecessarily doubled in derivation.

The words following, chiefly verbs, generally double the final consonant, contrary to the Rule:—bias, cancel, carburet (carbur*ett*ed[4]), carol, cavil, counsel, cudgel, dial (dia*ll*ing, dia*ll*age, dia*ll*ist), duel, equal, gravel, grovel, handsel, humbug, jewel, kennel, kidnap, level, libel, marshal, marvel, model, parallel, parcel, pencil, pommel, quarrel[5], revel, rivel, rival, shovel, shrivel, snivel, sulphuret (sulphur*ett*ed), trammel, travel, wool (woo*ll*en), worship.

The following verbs, though with the same final letters as those in the last list, usually preserve them single, in conformity to the general Rule: apparel[6], barrel, benefit, bigot, billet, buffet, channel[7], combat, drivel[7], fillet, gallop, gambol[7], gibbet, gossip, limit, rivet, visit, waggon, wainscot, wallop, whimper, wherret.

The 'formatives' of foot (though with o͞o) also conform to the Rule, as foot*ing*, foot*ed*; just as boot, fool, &c. (with o͞o), make boot*ed*, fool*ing*, fool*ish*, &c.; though, if the sound alone were followed, the first would have the t doubled.[8]

49—50.[1] * * * *

51. C, preceded by a vowel, assumes k at the end of nearly all MONOSYLLABLES, as in chec*k*, lic*k*, loc*k*, sic*k*, struc*k*, &c.; and this k is retained in their compounds, as brain-sic*k*, candlestic*k*, &c. The exceptions are—arc, lac, roc (a bird of Arab. myth.), and zinc.

Words of more than one syllable ending in -ic and -iac, formerly spelled with -ck, have dropped the k; as cubic, music, public, elegiac, maniac, and all similar words from the Greek and Latin, with others formed in analogy with them[9]. The chief exceptions occur in a few derivatives, in which the c assumes 'k' on taking an additional syllable beginning with e, i, or y, to prevent an erroneous pronunciation; as colic, colicky, frolic, frolicking, mimic, mimicking, mimicked, physic, physicking, traffic, trafficking, trafficked, trafficker, &c.; also in words of Teutonic, Gothic, or Saxon origin, with nearly all words in other terminations than -ic and -iac, as arra*ck*, fetlo*ck*, hemlo*ck*, paddo*ck*, wedlo*ck*, &c.

[1] The omission of these Sections is explained in the Preface (q. v.).

[4] Carbonetted has also two t's.

[5] But the obsolete adjective quarrelous, has usually only one l.

[6] But the l is commonly doubled in the participial adjectives apparelled and unapparelled, though apparently without just reason.

[7] But frequently written with ll.

[8] Dr Webster, and those who follow him—now a large, respectable, and rapidly increasing body of writers and printers, rigidly adhere to the above Rules in all cases; and this practice was recommended, though not adopted, by Walker, Lowth, Perry, and many of our older and most distinguished orthoëpists. 'It does not interfere with the rule, that chancellor, and the derivatives of crystal and metal, as crystalline, metalline, &c., have the l doubled, since they come directly from the Latin cancellarius and metallum, and the Greek κρύσταλλος'. (Webster.)

It may be observed, that when the writer is in doubt as to the prevailing usage in respect to any particular word, his safest course will be to adhere to the Rule, and adopt the orthography of Dr Webster.

[9] Most of these admit the terminations -al and -ally, as cubical, musical, musically; and it is inconvenient to add k to the 'primitive word', and to be obliged to omit it in the 'formative'.

58. TERMS in CHEMISTRY, NATURAL HISTORY, &c.—Words in -ide, as am'ide, bro'm*ide*, chlo"r*ide*, cy'an*ide*, fer'rocyan*ide*, flu'or*ide*, i'od*ide*, ox'ide, phos'ph*ide*, &c., though pronounced with the i short, are more usually written with the e final than without it, and hence this orthography is adopted with all of them that appear in this Dictionary. The word acid is the only one related to this class, which is uniformly spelled without the final e.

Words in -ine, as acon'it*ine*[10], bro'm*ine*, chlo"r*ine*, i'od*ine*, mor'ph*ine*, qui'n*ine*, sal'ic*ine*, stry'ch'n*ine* (strik'-), and nearly all other similar substantives except car'm*ine*, though pronounced, like the last, with the i short, are generally written with the final e, after the French, through which language many of them have been received; and the others have been formed after the same model.

Words in -ile, -ite, -yle, -yne, -yte, &c. See Section 45.

60. -ise, -ize.—VERBS from the Greek in ίζω, and others formed in analogy with them (except 'catechise' and 'exorcise'), were formerly written exclusively with the termination -ize, as baptize, legalize, vocalize, &c., and this z was retained in all their 'formatives' but those in -ist and -ism; while verbs directly from the French -iser, with some substantives from the same language, and a few words from other sources, as advertise, advise, affran'chise (v. i.), amor'tise, chastise, circumcise, comprise, compromise, criticise, demise, despise, devise, disfran'chise (v. i.), disguise, divertise, emprise, enfran'chise (v. i.), enterprise, exercise, fran'chise (-chiz), manumise, merchandise, misprise (to slight; to mistake), premise, reprise (s., v.; reprisal; to take again, to recompense), revise, supervise, surmise, surprise, &c., were formerly and still are exclusively written with -ise. This practice has the authority of Johnson, Sheridan, Walker, Webster, Smart, Hooper, Brande, and other leading lexicographers, with that of all our present standard writers who desire that their orthography shall be in accordance with both etymology and analogy; but the printers, who have always been the great reformers and simplifiers of 'spelling', have of late years raised such a determined opposition to the use of z in all words of the former class (except prize, and one or two others), that, at the present time, and taking the whole body of works issuing from the press, the prevalent orthography of these words, is to use -ise where '-ize' was formerly exclusively written.[11]

V. COMPOSITION and DERIVATION—Formatives, Prefixes, Affixes, Hyphen, &c.

88. COMPOSITION, etymologically considered, is the putting together of two whole words, so as to form a new word, which is called a 'compound', or a 'compound word'; as daylight, fire-wood, seaman, halfpenny, sinful, turnkey, bespread, foresee, undo, dear-bought, fresh-made, new-laid, &c.[1a]

[1] The omission of these Sections is explained in the Preface (q. v.).

[10] Correctly, but less usually, aconi'tine.

[11] Our duty, as lexicographer, has compelled us to adopt this mode of spelling in this Dictionary; but against almost every word in the language liable to this 'double orthography' we have placed a numerical reference to this Section, thus: Baptise, bap-tīz', vt. 60.,—Idealise, vt. 60., &c., which will at once acquaint the reader that he may follow his own taste or judgment with respect to the spelling of these words, as noticed in the Text.

[1a] The words 'derivative' (a.) and 'compound' (a.), are often confounded, or used so loosely as to confuse the reader. The definition given, and a correspondent use of these words, is absolutely necessary to avoid error when speaking of them.

DERIVATION is the addition of a letter, a syllable, or a part of a word, to another word called the 'radical' or 'simple', so as to form a new word, which is called a 'derivative', a 'derivative word', or a 'formative'; as lov*ing*, lov*ed*, from love; neat*ly*, neat*ness*, from neat; bravery from brave; woollen from wool; burth*en* from bear; &c.[1a]

COMMON FORMATIVES are 'derivatives' formed by adding or changing terminations in common use; such as -ing, -ed, -er, -or, -able, -hood, -dom, -ship, -al, -ic, -ly, -ose, -ous, -ness, -fy, -ise or -ize, &c.

A PREFIX is a letter, syllable, or particle, put at the beginning of a word, to modify its signification; as *a*long, *dis*sever, *dia*meter, *en*grave, *im*partial, *mis*construe, *per*suasion, *un*bent, *for*bearing, &c.[2]

An AFFIX or SUFFIX, is a letter, syllable, or particle, put at the end of a word, to modify its meaning; as lov*ing*, quiet*ed*, reason*able*, scorn*ful*, critic*al*, king*dom*, conceal*ment*, creat*ion*, golden, rogu*ish*, &c.

The 'Formatives'[3] of which a separate, or a full definition, is not given in this Dictionary, except in special cases, are—

a. PARTICIPLES:—1. Participles in -ing, express a continuation of the action, passion, or state, denoted by the verb; as 'he is building a house', 'I am writing a letter', 'they are moving in haste', &c.:—When used as Adjectives[4], they express the possession of the quality, &c., denoted by the verb, or that the substance which they qualify belongs or pertains to the one which is the correlative of the verb; to which is often added, the sense of a 'disposition to', or an 'exhibition of' this quality; as 'a loving child' (i. e., a child 'that loves'), 'he is very loving' (i. e., fond, affectionate, or amorous), 'a loving epistle' (i. e., an epistle 'expressing' love); 'a moving spectacle' (i. e., 'that moves', or is 'adapted to move'; or, figuratively, to 'excite' or 'affect', as the feelings or passions); 'his dying wishes' (i. e., those uttered or expressed immediately before 'death'), 'dying groans', 'parting words' (i. e., those pertaining to 'death', or to 'departure'):—When used as Substantives[5] they express the act or state denoted by the verb, or that which is done, or which results from it; as (a) covering (the act of hiding, concealing, or protecting by something placed over; also that which covers), humming (act; also the noise made), painting (act, art, employment, or trade of &c.; also a picture or surface so produced, &c.), sewing (act, art, or occupation; also its result—needle-work), sleeping (state of sleep), doings (things done; behaviour, conduct), &c.[6]

2. Participles in -ed, -d, -t, -en, -n, &c., express the completion or past existence of the action, passion, or state, denoted by the verb, just as the participle in -ing, expresses the 'continuance' of it, and, in their unqualified form, invariably convey the idea of 'past' time, or the past effect or result of an action, &c., sometime present; as 'he was heated with liquor,' 'he is loved for his virtues', 'she has wept in vain', 'he was chosen mayor', 'the letter is written', 'the bird is flown', 'having seen him', &c.:—When used as Adjectives[4], like the 'present participle', they express possession of the quality, &c., denoted by the verb; as 'a

[2] The principal 'prefixes' are noticed in their alphabetical places in this Dictionary.

[3] It is not pretended that all the 'formatives' noticed below, or placed after the leading words in the Dictionary, are actually derived from their apparent English originals, as many of them are received whole, or with some terminational alteration or omission, from the Latin, &c.; the reference of these 'formatives' to the leading word, in these cases, being a mere matter of convenience.

[5] Then called 'participial substantives'.

b. SUBSTANTIVES:—1. Substantives of the actor or agent in -ant, -ar, -ard, -ast, -ist, -er, -or, -ster, &c., with their correlatives in -ee; as attend*ant* (one who 'attends'), li*ar* (one who tells 'lies'), blink*ard* (one who 'blinks', or who has bad eyes), adher*ent* (one who 'adheres'; i. e., a follower or partisan), moral*ist* (one who 'moralises'; or appr., one who teaches or prac. morality), lov*er* (one who 'loves', or who is in 'love'; appr., a suitor), conquer*or* (one who 'conquers', or has 'conquered'), pun*ster* (one who 'puns', or is prone to 'punning'), song*ster* (one who utters 'song'; a 'singer'), grant*ee*, lessee (one to whom a 'grant' or a 'lease' is made), &c.

2. Abstract Substantives in -al, -ment, -ion, -sion, -tion, -ure, -ry, &c., expressing the act denoted by the 'verb', or the state or condition essential to it, or arising from it; also, sometimes, the thing or matter done, concerned, or produced, or the object acted on; as avow*al* (the act of one who 'avows', or the thing 'avowed'), dispos*al* (act or right of 'disposing', or the resulting order or state), reviv*al* (act of 'reviving', or the state of being 'revived'), abate*ment* (act or state of 'abating', or the sum, &c., 'abated'), punish*ment* (act; also the chastisement or evil inflicted), opin*ion* (that which is 'opined' or thought), conver*sion* (act of 'converting'; state of being 'converted'), creat*ion* (act of 'creating'; also that which is 'created'), regulat*ion* (act; state), pressu*re* (act of 'pressing'; state of being 'pressed'; force acting or employed), seiz*ure* (act; state), avow*ry* (avowal; v. sa.), rival*ry* (act or state of being a 'rival'), &c.

c. ADJECTIVES:—1. Adjectives in -able, -ible, -uble, &c., expressing capacity, liability, fitness, tendency, &c.; as abat*able* (that may be 'abated'), combat*able* (that may be 'combated'; prone to 'combat'), lov*able* (fit to be 'loved'; inducing 'love'), reason*able* (capable of 'reason'; endowed with 'r.'; conformable to 'r.'), reduc*ible* (that may be 'reduced'; liable to 'reduction'), sol*uble* (that may be 'dissolved'; solvable), &c.

2. Adjectives in -ant, -ent, &c., borrowed from the Latin, and which express quality or habit, and, for the most part, agree in meaning with the corresponding participial adjectives in -ing, as observ*ant* ('observing'; habitually attentive, &c.), cohe*rent* ('cohering'; connected, suitable, consistent), &c.

90. FORMATIVES from SUBSTANTIVES:—

a. SUBSTANTIVES:—1. Substantives in -age, expressing state of being or condition, as orphan*age* (state or cond. of an 'orphan'), person*age* (state of being a 'person'; a 'person' emphat.); act, business, or occupation of, or matters concerning, as broker*age* (act or bus., or charges of a 'broker'); also, frequently, collectiveness or general character, as cellar*age* ('cellars' collectively, or their gen. char.; also charges for 'cellar-room'), cord*age* ('cords' and ropes collec.), herb*age* ('herbs' collec.), pastur*age* ('pastures' collec.; bus. of 'pasturing' cattle), &c.

2. Abstract and collective Substantives in -acy, -cy, -dom, -head, -hood, -ing, -ship, -ry, -ty, -y, expressing essential state, condition viewed as a whole, duty, power, office, authority, &c., as cur*acy* (the office, employm., or benefice of a 'curate'); colonel*cy* (the commission, post, or rank of a 'colonel'), idiot*cy* (state or cond. of an 'idiot'); duke*dom* (the title, dignity, or territory of a 'duke'), king*dom* (the territory of a 'king'), thral*dom* (the cond. of a 'thrall' or slave); God*head* (state of being God; deity personified); brother*hood* (an assoc. or fraternity), child*hood* (state or cond. of a 'child', or the time of it), man*hood* (state of being a 'man'; essen. qualities of a 'man'; virility; courage, bravery, &c.); flooring (materials of a 'floor', or for 'floors'), roof*ing* (m. of or for a 'roof'; 'roofs' collectively); friend*ship* (state of being a 'friend'; attachm. or relation of 'friends'), stewardship (office or occup. of a 'steward'), workmanship (skill or art of a 'workman', or that produced by it; also the execution or particular manner in which any thing is 'wrought' or made); masonry (art, trade, or work of a 'mason'), priory (a convent or church presided over by a 'prior'), slavery (state or cond. of a 'slave'), soldiery ('soldiers' collec.), &c.

3. Substantives in -ism, implying tenets, doctrines, or principles, as Calvinism, Stoicism, Toryism, Wesleyism or Wesleyanism, &c. (the doctrines, &c., of 'Calvin', of the 'Stoics', of the 'Tories', of 'John Wesley' or the 'Wesleyans', &c.); operative agency, principle, power, or its effects, as in magnetism (from the 'magnet'), Galvanism or Voltaism (chemical electricity, or its effects, &c.; after 'Galvani' and 'Volta'), Mesmerism (animal magnetism; after 'Mesmer'), nervism (the exciting power or principle peculiar to the 'nerves'), &c.; and from these substantives, and others in -logy, -graphy, &c., are commonly formed Substantives in -ist and -er, denoting one who professes or holds such doctrines, or who is versed in, or who teaches or practises the particular art or science referred to, as atheist (from 'atheism'), Calvinist (from 'Calvinism'), botanist (from 'botany'), geologist (from 'geology'), hydrographer (from 'hydrography'), &c.

b. ADJECTIVES:—1. Adjectives in -al, -an, -ar, -ary, -ate, -en, -ic, -ical, -ish, -like, -ly, -n, -ose, -ous, -some, -y, &c., implying nature, likeness, quality, agreement, effect, &c., and commonly equivalent to 'of', 'pertaining, relating', or 'appropriate to', or 'resembling', placed before the word from which they are formed; as autumnal (of or peculiar to 'autumn'), choral (of or bel. to a 'chorus,' or to a 'choir'), critical (of or done by a 'critic'), discretional (pert. or left to, or done at 'discretion'); Spartan (pert. to anc. 'Sparta'; res. the 'Spartans'); lunar, polar, solar (of, or bel. to, or caused by the 'moon', 'pole', or 'sun'), popular (of, or bel. to, or favoured by the 'populace' or 'people'); discretionary (discretional; v. sup.), visionary (of the nature of 'visions'; affected by 'v.'); roseate (pert. to, res., of the colour of a 'rose'; full of 'roses'), stylate (formed like or res. a 'style'), ashen (of or bel. to the 'ash-tree', or its wood), oaten (made of 'oats', or of an 'oat-straw' or 'reed'), wooden (of the nature of 'wood'; made of 'w.'), woollen (pert. to 'wool', or cons. or made of it); aristocratic or aristocratical (pert. to, of characteristic of an 'aristocrat' or the 'aristocracy'), symbolic or symbolical (of the nature or import of a 'symbol'); bookish (pert. to 'books'; addicted to 'b.'), knavish (bel. to, charac. of, or done by a 'knave'); dove-like, god-like, &c. (res. or like a 'dove', 'god', &c. = -ly; v. i.); homely (pert. or suitable to, or res. 'home'; done at 'h.'), manly (bel. or suitable to, or charac. of, or becoming 'man' or 'manhood'; man-like); aldern (made of 'alder'); farinose (pert. to, res. or cov. with, or as with, 'farina' or meal), globose (shaped as or res. a 'globe'), clamorous (cons. in or full of 'clamour'), foliose ('leaf'-like; aboun. in or has 'leaves'; 'leafy'), religious (of or rel. to 'religion'), schistous (formed of or res. 'schist'; slaty), seditious (pert. to or tainted with 'sedition'); frolicsome (given to or full of 'frolic'), mettlesome (hav. 'mettle'; high-spirited, sprightly); craftsman (pos. 'craft', or of the nature of it), motory (pert. to, or acting as a 'motor' or mover; giv. 'motion'), noisy (marked by or full of 'noise'), starchy (cons. of, res. aboun. in, or of the nature of 'starch'); &c.

2. Adjectives in -ed, implying the possession of some quality or form, or likeness to it; as beak'ed (hav. a 'beak'), ragg'ed (reduced to or res. 'rags'; wearied 'r.', &c.), wing'ed (hav. a 'w.' or 'wings'), &c. Also—

3. Adjectives in -ful, denoting abundance or characteristicalness; as boastful (full of 'boasts'; charac. by 'boasting'), careful (f. of or char. by 'care'), merciful (hav. or exercis. 'mercy'), pitiful, sorrowful, &c.:—Adjectives in -less, implying absence or want of; as careless (without 'care'), merciless (without 'mercy'; cruel unsparing):—Adjectives in -most, implying nearness; as endmost (nearest to 'end'); &c.

the direction or manner of; as eastward (toward the 'east'), homeward (toward 'home'); sidelong (on or in the direction of the 'side'; laterally); endwise (on the 'end'; with the 'end' forward), lengthwise (in the manner or direc. of the 'length'), &c.

91. FORMATIVES from ADJECTIVES:—

a. ADJECTIVES:—1. The Degrees of comparison by which the signification of the same adjective is increased by means of the affix -er and -est; as bold, bolder, boldest; happy, happier, happiest; wise, wiser, wisest; &c.

2. Other Adjectives in -ish, expressing approximation or resemblance; as grayish (rather 'gray'), whitish (somewhat 'white'):—Adjectives in -most, implying in the greatest or highest degree; as foremost (first in place or rank), hindmost (most backward or behind):—Adjectives in -some, expressing equality; as blithesome ('blithe'), lonesome ('lone'), &c.

b. ADVERBS in -ly, implying in the manner, time, degree, &c., expressed by the adjective, or with the quality referred to in the correlative substantive; as greatly (in a 'great' degree), justly (in a 'just' manner, or with 'justice'), lovingly (in a 'loving' m.), monthly (in [every] 'month'; once a 'm.'), wisely (in a 'wise' m., or with 'wisdom'), &c.

c. SUBSTANTIVES:—1. Substantives in -ance, -ancy, -ence, -ency, -dom, -hood, -ism, -ness, -th, -ility, -city, -ity, -ty, -y, expressing abstract quality or condition, or its result, and sometimes, that which constitutes it, or is so; as elegance or elegancy (the quality of being 'elegant'; or that which is so, or which constitutes it), repugnance or repugnancy (the qual. or state of being 'repugnant'); convenience or conveniency (the q. of being 'convenient'; or that which is so); freedom (the q. or cond. of being 'free'), wisdom (the q. of being 'wise'); falsehood (the q. of being 'false'; also that which is 'f.'); truism (q. of being 'true', or that which is so); abjectness (the q. or cond. of being 'abject'), goodness (q. of being 'good'); dearth (the state of being 'dear' [i. e., scarce], or its result), warmth (state or q. of being 'warm'); possibility (q. or state of being 'possible'); spontaneity (q. or s. of being 'spontaneous'); purity (q. or s. of being 'pure'), frivolity (q. of being 'frivolous'; also a 'f.' act, &c.), legality (q. or s. of being 'legal'); piety (the q. of being 'pious'), royalty (q. or state of being 'royal'; kingship); honesty (q. of being 'honest'); &c.

2. Substantives in -ard, a termination implying permanent state, habit, or disposition, as dullard (a 'dull', heavy person), drunkard (one who is habitually 'drunk', or given to 'drinking'), sluggard (one who has the disposition or habits of a 'slug', or who indulges in sloth), &c.

d. VERBS in -en, -fy, and -ise or -ize, terminations implying 'to make', or 'to become'; as brighten (to make or to become 'bright'); purify (to make 'pure'); equalise (to render 'equal'); &c.[7]

92. FORMATIVES and compounds from ADVERBS, PREPOSITIONS, &c.—Adverbs in -about, as hereabout ('about' this place), thereabout ('about' that place; nearly):—in -forth, as henceforth ('forth' from this time), thenceforth ('forth' from that time):—in -from, as therefrom ('from' this or that):—in -of, as hereof ('of' this; from this):—in -out, as hereout ('out' of this):—in -ward, as backward (with the 'back' in advance; in a 'back' direction; 'towards' the 'back' or the 'b.' part), hitherward ('toward' this place), thitherward ('toward' that place); with others for the most part self-explanatory.

[7] -ate, another common verbal termination, in English, is from the Latin passive participle in -atus; as communicate (v.; from 'communicatus'), congregate (v.; from 'congregatus'), permeate (v.; from 'permeatus'), &c. And the past participles of these verbs, in -ated, furnish a numerous tribe of 'participial adjectives' which, by dropping the -d, produce an almost equally numerous tribe of adjectives in -ate, of equivalent signification.

93. The use or non-use of the HYPHEN (-) is often a matter of embarrassment to inexperienced writers. Some compound words and expressions are properly written with it, and others without it; but usage is not always uniform even with respect to the same words. In general, a careful consideration of the sense to be conveyed, and of the grammatical construction of the clause or sentence, will be sufficient to prevent any gross error, either in its use or omission.[8]

VI. FOREIGN and CLASSICAL WORDS—Literal Equivalents, Accents, &c.[1]

99.—a. FOREIGN WORDS which are not anglicised, or familiarised by long use, are pronounced, by educated Englishmen, as nearly as possible, in the same manner as they are in the countries to which the languages in which they occur belong.

The following Tables exhibit the usual sounds of the letters in the leading European languages, so far as they differ from the English:[2]—

Vowels.

A, has usually the sound of 'a' in far, father; or when short, nearly that of 'a' in fat; never that of ā in fate.

â, Fr., has always the sound of 'a' in bar, far, &c.

E, generally sounds like 'a' in mate; but not unfrequently like the 'e' in met, pet.

é, Fr., has the sound of 'a' in day when rapidly uttered:—ê, that of 'e' in best, often approaching closely to the 'a' in mate:—ê̂, that of 'e' in there, or 'a' in mare:—e (unaccented), that of ĕh (nearly = 'u' in but, fur); or it is wholly silent, and always so when final in a word or syllable after a consonant preceded by a vowel, and at the end of words of two or more syllables.

I, has usually the sound of 'e' in treat, or of 'i' in magazine; and not unfrequently that of 'I' in fig; never that of 'I' in pine. I final, in Fr., is, like the Eng. 'y', equiv. to the 'brief' or 'alphabetic' e.

O, has nearly the same sounds as in English; heard in bone, not, nor. In Swed. and Norw., that of o͞o or o͝o. In Fr., when preceded by a consonant, and followed by a long or circumflexed vowel, it has sometimes a sound resembling 'w', as in poêle (pwäle).

ô, Fr., is always long and open.

U, has generally the sound of o͞o or o͝o, heard in mood, and in foot and bull. In Dutch and Fr., long u or û, has a sound between that of o͞o and ē, arising [8] The due employment of the hyphen in the pages of this Dictionary has been particularly attended to, and the writer may safely take it as his authority on this subject.

Foreign printers usually employ two kinds of hyphens; the one (-), when a word is parted by the sudden conclusion of a line; the other (=), to shew that the parts of a word so separated, would have been connected by a hyphen if such separation had not taken place: thus—

The London book-	The trade of a negro= sellers are &c.	merchant is &c.

[9] The omission of these Sections is explained in the Preface (q. v.).

[1] See Preface.

[2] The English 'equivalents' given in these Tables are, in some cases, merely approximations to the sounds referred to; since several foreign sounds can only be accurately conveyed by a living teacher.

from an attempt to pronounce these vowels simultaneously, during which the lips are 'contracted', nearly as for whistling, instead of being protruded, as for the Eng. o͞o. This u nearly resembles that in the Scotch word 'guide'[3]. The short Fr. u, also somewhat partakes of this peculiarity.

Y, Dan., Norw., and Swed., resembles the Fr. u; in Dutch, it sounds like the long Eng. i (ī); whilst in the other continental languages, it is equiv. to the foreign 'i' (i. e., the Eng. ĭ), noticed above.

Diphthongs and Vowel-digraphs.

Ae, æ, ä, are generally sounded like 'a' in fate; but sometimes short, like 'e' in met. In Dutch, like the 'a' in bar or father.

aeu, äu, Ger., sound somewhat like 'oi' or 'oy', in oil and toy; but with a peculiar modification derived from the initial vowel, and which renders the sound triphthongal.

ai, ay, are generally sounded like the long Eng. i (ī); but in Fr., like 'a' in fate or laid.

au, has generally the sound of 'ou' or 'ow', heard in our, power; but in Fr., that of ä.

Eau, Fr., resembles au (Fr.), equiv. to ŏ.

ei, ey, are generally pronounced like the long diphthongal Eng. 'a', heard in aye, day, bare, when fully and slowly pronounced. In Fr., they have a sound closely resembling the 'a' in fate; in Ger., that of the long Eng. i (ī).

eu, Fr., has three gradations of sound, varying from the 'i' in Sir, or the 'u' in but or muff, to the 'e' in her, or 'u' in fur; as heard in the Fr. words neute, jeune, and peur or mineur, but in each slightly longer. In Ger., these letters sound like 'oi' or 'oy' in boil, toy.

Ie, ie, ī, usually sound like ĕ or ee in beat and feet; but in Fr., before r final they are either separately pronounced (= ĕ-ä), or nearly coalesce, as in Eng., to form a diphthong (= y'ä or 'ä), changing in many Fr. substantives to -ĕre or -ē-ĕr.

Oe, ö, in the Germanic languages are somewhat like the Fr. 'eu', or the 'e' in her, combining the sound of the short guttural 'u' in tub, and the 'e' in met, with a slight accent or stress on the first element or ŭ; in Fr., oe is nearly similar to the 'a' in day.

oeu, œu, Fr., are nearly similar to 'eu' (Fr.).

oi, Fr., sounds nearly like the 'wa' in wall or waft, or more correctly comes between the two; sometimes shortened to the like sound in was (wŏz) or warren (wŏr'-); but in a few words its sound resembles the Fr. ai, or the 'a' in fate.

ou, Fr., is like 'oo' in fool and mood; and, in its shorter form, like 'oo' in foot and good; at the beginning of a word or syllable, when immediately followed by a vowel, its power generally closely resembles that of our initial w. In Celtic, it often sounds like ŏ.

Ue, ue, ü, are generally sounded like the Fr. u; but are sometimes silent.

Ui, Ger., nearly resembles the Fr. 'ui' or 'oui'.

W, Welsh, in the middle, or towards the end of a word or syllable, sounds as o͞o or o͝o.

Consonants.

B, Ger. (at the end of words) sounds like the Eng. p; in mod. Gr. and Rus., and in Sp. (when bet. two vowels), like v.

[3] The Fr. u has been hyperbolically called a 'vocalised whistle'.

C, It., before e and i, sounds like the ch in chill; in the same position, in Sp., like z, or like the th in thin (but in the 'Catalan dialect' like s). In Ger., before e, i, and y, it sounds like the Ger. z, or the Eng. ts; in Polish, in all positions, like ts.

D, Dutch, Ger., at the end of words, sounds like t; in Dan. and Sp., when occurring between two vowels, or at the end of words, like th in this.

G, is always 'hard', as in gold, before a, o, and u; in Dan., Ger., Norw., and Polish, it is 'hard' in all positions and combinations, sometimes with a guttural sound. In Fr., Port., Sp., and Swed., before e, i, and y, it is like the j of these languages (q. v.); in Ital., in the same position, it is like the Eng. j or soft g. In Dutch, in all positions, it sounds like a strongly aspirated h.

gu, Fr., Port., and Sp., even before e, i, and y, sounds like g hard.

H, Fr., It., Port., and Sp., is either wholly silent, or is very feebly aspirated. In the other continental Eur. languages it sounds as in Eng. It is silent in all of them, when following a vowel in the same syllable, its office being merely to shew that the preceding vowel is 'long'; as in Bo*h*n (bōne).

J, Fr., Port., has the sound of zh, equiv. to the s in pleasure, and the z in azure. In Sp., like x, it resembles a strongly aspirated h; in Dan., Dutch, Ger., It., Polish, Swed., and Norw., it is pronounced like the Eng. initial y.

M or N, Fr. and Port., when final in a word or syllable, and not doubled, or followed by a vowel, has a feeble 'nasal' sound, or more accurately, imparts a nasal sound to the immediately preceding vowel, with a sort of aspirate or breathing, which in the 'notation' of words in which it occurs, is commonly represented by appending g; but in pronouncing these sounds, particularly in Fr. words, care must be taken that the nasal tone rests in, and does not pass through the nose, and that the tongue be kept quiescent, and not carried back or pressed against the palate, as is done in articulating the Eng. -ng, which is much more strongly 'nasal' than the Fr. sounds referred to[4].

ñ, Sp., is similar to the Fr. gn (q. v.).

Qu, Fr., Port., and Sp., followed by any other vowel, has the sound of k; in the termination -que (Fr.), the e final is also silent. See Sections 24, 33, 45.

R, in all positions, is trilled like the initial r in Eng., but when initial, much more strongly.

S, between two vowels, has generally the sound of z; in Ger., it is also often so when initial; in Hung., it sounds like the Ger. sch.

V, Ger., sounds like the Eng. f.

W, in the Germanic languages, is nearly identical with the Eng. v.

X, Fr. and Belg., has often the sound of s, as in Bruxelles (brōō-sĕl'; Brus'els, Eng.), Auxerre (ō-sārr'), &c.; but in Fr., more generally that of ks, subject to the same euphonic changes, as in English. In Port., it has the sound of sh; in Sp., generally that of a strongly aspirated h.

Z, Ger. and Swed., has the sound of ts; in It., that of ds.

Combined and Doubled Consonants.

Ch, Mex., Rus., Sp. (except in the dialect of 'Catalonia', where it sounds k), has the sound of the Eng. ch (tsh) in church. In Celt. and It., it sounds like k; in Ger., Polish, and some other allied languages, like a strongly [4] The use of g final, or -ng, in the 'notation' of Fr. words, is adopted as the only available means of indicating, to the mere English scholar, that the preceding consonant, or rather the preceding vowel, is 'nasal'. In these cases the g is printed in Italic type, to remind the reader that, though significant, it is itself silent.

aspirated, guttural h, for which, in Eng. pronunciation of these words, k is usually substituted. In Fr. and Port., it has the sound of sh; the exceptions in Fr., being confined to words in which it occurs before l or r, and in a few words from the Gr., where it sounds hard, like k.

Gh, has usually the sound of g hard, as in ghost. In Celt., when final, it usually sounds like k.

gl, It., is a peculiar liquid sound, organically produced by putting the tongue in the position for l, and simultaneously raising the back part of it almost into the position for ĕ or initial y, before speaking. The effect is nearly the sound of -l-y-, with the l faintly given; and this sound is commonly substituted for it by the English, as in intaglio (-tăl'-yo), oglio (ŏl'-yo), &c.

gn, Fr. and It., is a peculiar liquid sound formed from n, in precisely the same manner as the It. gl is formed from l. The resulting sound is nearly that of -n-y, or of the -nie- in convenient; and this sound is usually substituted for the former one in English mouths; as in Cognac (kŏn'-yăk, or -y'ăk), &c.

Lh, Port., is identical with the It. gl (q. v.).

ll, Fr., when preceded by i, and followed by a vowel either accented, or not mute, has when properly and elegantly pronounced, precisely the sound of the It. gl; but colloquially, the greater number of Fr. speakers, and foreigners who follow them, substitute a sort of 'whisper' or 'breathing' for the first element, and instead of mouillé (mo͞o'-yā, with the l faint, but sounded) for instance, say mouillé (mo͞oh'-yā, in which the h represents the 'whisper' or 'breathing' just noticed; or even mo͞o-yā, without it). The true Sp. ll, the It. gl, and the Port. lh, are never thus corrupted by educated natives.—The true Welsh ll is a peculiar sound 'produced by placing the tongue in the position for l, and forcing a strong whisper, without any voice, out at the sides of the tongue, thus causing them to vibrate'[5]. For this sound the English, and other people out of Wales, commonly substitute a single Eng. l; but in a few proper names, a kind of compromise is made, as in Llanelly, Llangollen, &c., which are generally pronounced lăn-ĕth'-le, lăn-gŏth'-lĕn, &c.

-ng, Ger., sounds nearly like the same combination in English.

Nh, nh, Port., is identical in sound with the Fr. and It. gn, and the Sp. ñ.

Sch, Dutch, resembles the Eng. sk; in Ger., it is like our sh.

ss, in Ger. and the allied languages, has the same sharp sound as in English.

sz, Ger. and Hung., sounds like s sharp or ss.

Th, in all the continental languages, except Gr., is pronounced like simple t. In Gr., it resembles the Eng. th.

tsch, Rus., is like ch (tsh) in church.

Zs, zz, It., usually sounds like ts.

French words, unlike the English, have no 'decided' accent. In pronouncing them, the syllables should be uttered with a nearly equal smoothness and fluency; merely observing to give a long, or semi-long quantity to the vowel of the last syllable when a previous one is accented, in all such words as require it.

b.—Latin; Greek; Hebrew.—The pronunciation of these languages adopted in England, as far as the sounds of the letters are concerned, and subject to the few exceptions noticed below, is the same as that of the modern English. These exceptions consist chiefly in the uniformity of sound given to the vowels, diphthongs, and vowel-digraphs, which are not liable to vary their sounds as in our own language—'æ' and 'œ' being almost always sounded as ē,—'ei', as ī, and—'i' final, in words, though unaccented, uniformly as long i (ī):—'eu' sounds like [5] 'Ethnical Orthography', by A. J. Ellis.

Digitized by Google

ū; as does also 'ue', except in certain positions in which it follows s, or another consonant, and is followed by a vowel, as in Suetonius, where it assumes the sound of w:—'oi' and 'oy', when the vowels do not belong to separate syllables, have their usual diphthongal sound, as in English.

In respect to the Consonants in classical words, the English analogy is almost always followed:—C and g (except in Hebrew) are either soft or hard according to the vowels that follow them; and c, with s and t, are liable, in nearly all cases, to the same changes and aspiration, when preceded by the accent, and followed by i or e, and another vowel, as in English words[6]:—G, in Hebrew, with a very few exceptions[7], is always 'hard':—Ph sounds as f; and, like th, if the first letter be doubled, the p (or t) either loses its distinctness, or coalesces with the ph (or th) in utterance, as in Sappho, Matthew, &c.[8]:—Ch (except in cherub, cherubim, cherubic, and Rachel, where it sounds like the Eng. ch.; i. e., tsh), has always the sound of k.

-es, at the end of a word, sounds like -ēz; as in ig'nes (-nēz).

-os, at the end of plural cases, is pronounced like ose, with the s sharp; as in nos (nōse), il'los (-ōse).

The Accent in Latin words of two syllables, is uniformly on the first syllable. In words of more than two syllables, if the 'penultima' or vowel of the last syllable but one, is long, it is accented; but if it is short, the 'antepenultima' or last syllable but two, is accented. When the 'penultima' is common, the accent, in prose, is upon the 'antepenultima'.

Hebrew words being chiefly received through the Greek of the 'Septuagint', like Greek words, usually follow the analogy of the Latin.

In reference to 'quantity', it may be observed that—1. A vowel before another vowel, in the same word, is short:—2. Diphthongs, not beginning with u, are long:—3. A vowel before j, x, or z, a doubled consonant, or any two consonants except a 'mute' and a 'liquid', is long by 'position':—4. A vowel before a 'mute' and a 'liquid', as in cerebrum, tenebræ, &c., is 'common' (i. e., either long or short).

Every Greek and Latin word has as many syllables as there are separate vowels and diphthongs.—E final is always sounded[10]:—The exceptions are—Scriptural names with a 'gentile' termination purely English, follow the English analogy: thus, in 'Gil'eadītes', 'Hitt'ītes', 'Esēnes'', 'Gadarenes'', -ites and -enes are pronounced in one syllable[11].

A, ā. The first letter of the alphabet in most languages; a fact probably arising from its being the first sound naturally formed by the organs of speech, without restraint or effort, beyond that of mere vocalisation. 6-11.

A, ă or ə, art. A contr. of an, employed, for the sake of euphony, before subs. of the sing. numb. beginning with all the consonants except silent h, and h sounded when the accent is on the second syllable; also before long u, and before o sounding like w: as—a ship, a watch, a year, a unit, such a one. See An.

A, ă or ə, prp. In Saxon words it is equiv. to at, by, in, on, or to: as—I am a walking; once a year; aboard, ashore, aside; gone a hunting, &c. In words from the Greek, a, or an, expresses absence, loss, or negation: as—achromatic, anarchy. In Latin words compounded with a, ab, or abs, the pfx. denotes departure or separation: as—abnormal, abrade, abstract, &c. [or his priesthood. 91.

Con, ad. 17. = con'trà (by contr.), denoting the negative side of a question. (See Pro.) It is also used as a pfx. (v. i.)

Con-, pfx. (L.) Usually equiv. to cum (with), expr. together, union, assoc., or joint action or agency. In other cases it is eq. to val'dè (much, greatly, very much), and then merely acts as an intensive particle. Somet. it stands, by contr., for con'trà (v. su.). When used in the first of these senses, and joined to com. words, the new comp. is self-expl., and gen. retains the acc. and pron. of the prim. word (q. v.). Such comp. (esp. with co-) are const. 'coined' in conv., and used for current purp., at will. The n of this pfx. (con-) is changed into l before l; into r before r; and into m before b and p, and somet., also bef. f and v. Before a vowel and h, and (†) in cert. other comb., it drops its final letter. In a very few cases the n is eh. into g. Thus, the com. pfxs—co-, cog-, col-, com-, con-, cor-, are merely var. of the same particle. 17, 25, 69. See Ob-, Conceal, &c.

Dis-, dĭs, occ. dĭz, pfx. 35. It denotes (1) separation or a parting from, and may then be rendered by the words—in two directions, or in opp. or diff. ways. H. also, and much more freq., it has (2) the force of a privative or negative, and reverses the signif. of the words to which it is joined. The comp. of this class are, in gen., self-expl., and merely req. insertion here, to shew their auth. and pron. Any pec. var. or force of meaning wh. has been given, or superadded to some of them by usage, is, however, noticed aft. each. In a few cases, when joined to words already impl. sep. or neg., this pfx (3) simply acts as an intensive particle (like de-), and does not reverse their meaning. In some comp. (par. those with di-, and direc. from the Gr.), it den. two, twice, or twofold, and is then equiv. to δις-, or dia-. The other forms of this pfx—dĭ-, dĭf-, dĭv-, are euphonic var., dep. for their use on the char. of the initial letter of the words to which they are added. (L.; orig. Gr.) See Con-, De-, Dia-, &c., and below. [For p., pp., a., &c., in dis-, omitted after their e, and ad., &c., aft. their a., and for the figured pron. in full, see the prim. word.
